| CBN Reporter Chuck Holton Reports: Since the start of the pandemic, nearly 200,000 Americans have died from drug overdoses, an alarming increase over previous years. The year 2020 alone saw a record 92,000 drug overdoses across the United States, and while final numbers have yet to be released for 2021, last year's total looks to be higher still. The crisis is being driven by a fairly new, ultra-potent drug: fentanyl. Only two milligrams of fentanyl can be lethal. In 2021 US Customs and Border Protection seized more than 11,000 pounds of fentanyl in the United States – enough to kill more than 2.5 billion people. The drug is being laced into less potent drugs like marijuana and heroin, often without the knowledge of the user. West Virginia saw a 40% increase in the number of overdose deaths just in 2020 alone. And Fentanyl played an increasing part in those 1,200 deaths. But if you talk to experts here in West Virginia, they'll tell you it's also the federal government's response to the pandemic that's to blame. One former addict, who is referred to as "Kristen" to protect her anonymity, agrees. The source of the fentanyl flooding America's streets might come as a surprise. According to data compiled by the Drug Enforcement Administration, illicit fentanyl is primarily manufactured in China and smuggled into the United States through Mexico. Some say this should constitute as an act of war. These experts fear Fentanyl may prove to be our adversary's most powerful weapon – defeating America from the inside out. | | | | | | |

| 700 Club NewsWatch #03212022 | CBN 52:30 | 3:00 | REC | PA/O/E | 3/21/2022 | 2:00 PM |

CBN Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: "Criminals," "addicts," and "mentally ill," are some of the ways people view the homeless. However, one Christian ministry in the fight chooses to label these people "children of God." Increasing crime in New York City's subways, including a tragic murder in which a young woman was pushed in front of an oncoming train allegedly by a homeless man, led Mayor Eric Adams to release the Subway Safety Plan in which city workers will relocate the vast numbers of homeless people living in the subways to shelters. In California, Gov. Gavin Newsom unveiled CARE Court which would create mental health courts in each county and offer treatment to homeless people with mental illness, and in some cases requiring people to submit to treatment. The measure has yet to be approved by the state legislature. While governments play a major role in addressing homelessness, Christian ministries, such as Dream Center Hampton Roads in Norfolk, Virginia, are also helping people who live on the street. Co-founder David McBride, pastor of New Life Church Ghent told CBN News, six years ago he was inspired to start the ministry by the parable of the Good Samaritan. Co-founder Nick Noel told CBN the ministry helps connect people currently living on the streets to various nearby resources such as shelters, employment training centers, addiction recovery programs, and mental health services. Another pillar of Dream Center Hampton Roads involves focusing on personal, long-term relationships. Church volunteers develop non-judgmental, one-on-one relationships, with appropriate boundaries, with people who need help. Pastor McBride compares it to a mentoring program with the goal of helping people identify and achieve their dreams. In addition to sending homeless people to nearby services, Dream Center Hampton Roads also trains volunteers to offer certain services as part of the ministry. Noel says while crimes involving homeless individuals grab headlines, many people currently living on the street are not criminals, addicts, or mentally ill. Many people find themselves living on the streets through no fault of their own. A hot meal opened the door for Zach Sarro to accept help from Dream Center Hampton Roads. He got a job, an apartment, and gave his life to Jesus. So while government-sponsored shelters and services definitely help the homeless, Dream Center Hampton Roads shows the difference the church and Christians with a personal interest can make in the lives of those currently living on the streets.

| The Impact of TBN #1 | 25:59 | 25:59 | REC | PA /O/E | 3/27/2022 | 5:00 AM |

The Impact of TBN: Taking the great commission literally, since 1973 TBN has gone from the neighborhoods of Los Angeles to the homes, hotel rooms, hospitals, and prisons across the globe, through on the ground ministry, to the latest in smart technology; becoming a new church reaching those bound by sickness, persecution, confinement, and fear. In 2020, seemingly, one virus, COVID-19, shut down our entire world. Everything about normal changed as we began isolating and social distancing. We had to do life differently, from how we work and study to how we socialize and worship. Seeing the need for a virtual church, TBN created uplifting and empowering services led by some of today's most prominent Christian leaders. While the coronavirus isn't over and the economy is still reeling, we have a choice, and that choice can either leave us to wallow in fear and anxiety or it can lead us to victory. TBN wants to be a part of the solution. TBN has carried the message of Jesus, making God and His word known among the nations, for every man, woman, and child in search of hope. TBN launched Second Chance, an initiative that takes Jesus to the prisons of America; equipping and installing the Church in hundreds of prisons across 41 states for more than one million inmates. By providing these prisoners with networks like TBN, the Hillsong channel, and Enlace, our Hispanic Christian channel, we are seeing lives change.

| #02092022 | CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: Several governors are taking an about-face when it comes to requiring masks in public schools, citing the rapid drop off in COVID-19's Omicron surge. The end to the mandates in New Jersey, Connecticut, Delaware, and Oregon will take effect between now and the end of March depending on the state. California announced plans to end its indoor masking requirement for vaccinated people next week, but masks will still be the rule for students. The current mask mandate in New York, once ground zero for the pandemic, is set to expire Thursday. Gov. Kathy Hochul is set to drop the state's indoor mask mandate according to the New York Times. But she is expected to keep the mandate in place for the city's schools. CDC Director Rochelle Walensky cautions against lifting the mandates saying the country isn't out of the woods yet. Still the battle is playing out in various ways across the country. In Chicago, a group of students recently walked out of a class after being told to mask up. Masking and other COVID restrictions are leading some families to leave the blue states for red states. Texas, Florida, and Arizona, all Republican-led states, have banned mask mandates and they are now seeing a surge in new residents. Karol Markowicz is a columnist for the New York Post and Fox News. A lifelong New Yorker, she recently relocated her family to Florida. She has written extensively about the issue of masking children during the pandemic and says many oppose New York's actions. Since moving to Florida, Markowicz said she has seen a big difference in her kids. Meanwhile, more states may follow suit in lifting mask mandates now that school age children are eligible for vaccinations. | | | | | |

| Cody Crouch Presents This Month in Christian History: Standing Trial. In the face of great adversity often comes some of history's greatest stories. Throughout history during the month of February many brave Christians have stood trial for their beliefs. These heroes of the faith stood for Jesus against some of the world's greatest evils. In fact, history would look very different without these fearless Christians who were willing to risk their health, their reputations, and their lives. This month we recognize the people who stood for Christ on public trial so that we may practice our faith in public and in private places. We learn about St. Valentine and the origin of Valentine's Day, Joan of Arc, Martin Niemoller, and Corrie Ten Boom. | | | | | | |

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Keeping your uric acid level in check could help prevent early death or Alzheimer's Disease, according to new research. However, most people are unaware of their uric acid level, what it should be, and how to get it into a healthy range. When you visit the doctor for your annual physical, chances are you will get your blood tested. That usually includes a check of your uric acid level to see if you're at risk for the arthritic condition called gout. Recent studies, however, show too much uric acid in the body may also predict other, more serious conditions, according to neurologist Dr. David Perlmutter, M.D., a fellow at the American College of Nutrition. In his book "Drop Acid: The Surprising New Science of Uric Acid – The Key to Losing Weight, Controlling Blood Sugar, and Achieving Extraordinary Health," Dr. Perlmutter cites a massive study that followed 90,000 adults for eight years. Individuals in the group with the highest uric acid had a 15 percent increased risk of death. That number grew to 35 percent for death from stroke and a 39 percent increased risk from a heart event. When it comes to brain health, a 12-year Japanese study showed a similar cause for concern. Perlmutter said the ideal level for uric acid should be lower than 5.5. About 100 years ago, the average uric acid level in humans was about 3.3 but now it's greater than 6.0. Your doctor can test your uric acid level. It's also easy to do it with a home uric acid monitor every couple of weeks until you've met your goal, then once a month after that. If you need to drop your level, Perlmutter recommends two supplements found at health stores. They are 500 milligrams of quercetin per day and 100 milligrams of luteolin daily. Uric acid forms when our bodies break down alcohol, seafood, and fructose. Perlmutter said consuming too much of these substances can lead to unhealthy levels of uric acid. He points out that many people assume fructose is healthy because it's found in fruit and says that's partially true. Aside from whole fruit, however, fructose is usually found in highly concentrated doses in other items at the grocery store. Fruit juices are loaded with it as are most processed foods. The grand-daddy of them all is high fructose corn syrup, which should raise a red flag to consumers. In addition to paying attention to what we eat and drink, we can also lower our uric acid by focusing on when we eat and drink. Perlmutter said using intermittent fasting, where you don't consume any calories for about 14 hours in a row, should cause your levels of uric acid to go down. Finally, strive for a good night's sleep. One study showed a substantial rise in uric acid levels in people with sleep apnea, a condition where a person's breathing repeatedly stops and starts. A sleep study and treatment for that condition can set things straight.

| Life is precious. A gift from God. On today's episode of Takeaways, we're going to discuss the importance of loving and protecting life. Please know that our intent on covering this sensitive topic is simply to reflect and stand for what matters to God as found in scripture. God told both Isaiah and Jeremiah that he had formed them in the womb. He knew Jeremiah. He called him for a special purpose before he was born. And in Galatians Paul said that God had set him apart before he was born. We hope you find this episode to be insightful, inspiring, and laced with the grace that God offers. If like our first guest abortion has been a part of your past our message to you is simple. Romans 1 tells us that there is no condemnation for those who place their faith in Jesus Christ. His forgiveness is available and lasting. He loves you and we love you. If you are currently experiencing an unplanned pregnancy, our compassionate well-informed guests, Abby Johnson, Pro-Life Activist, and Justin Reeder, Founder of Love Life, have information and resources that are immediately available to you at Loveline.com and lovelife.org. | | | | | | |

| CBN News Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: If you need medical care in a hospital for something other than COVID, it could be hard to find, depending on where you live. Even as the Omicron surge is declining, it's still undermining care for other health problems. The good news is that the number of COVID-19 cases is finally falling in the United States. Omicron cases are dropping or leveling off in more than half the country. Dr. Anthony Fauci says the current wave could peak in February. But some hospitals are still overwhelmed, like Mercyhealth Hospital in Wisconsin. In some states, it isn't letting up at all. In Alabama, for example, cases have doubled in the past week. The U.S. recorded over 18 million new cases in the last month alone. That's more than a quarter of the nation's total number of confirmed COVID-19 cases reported since the beginning of the pandemic. Amid the surge, the FDA has expanded the use of remdesivir, an expensive and controversial treatment. And health officials are still saying your best defense is to be vaccinated. But on Friday, a federal judge in Texas issued a nationwide injunction barring the government from enforcing President Biden's vaccine mandate for federal workers. The Justice Department plans to appeal the decision. Overseas, protests are expanding across Europe over vaccine mandates. Now, France and other governments are showing signs of backing down. In the U.K., with 74,000 NHS workers facing firing because they won't get the jab and British Prime Minister Boris Johnson fighting for his political life amid a scandal called "Partygate," Johnson has lifted restrictions including COVID-19 passes, mask mandates, and work-from-home guidance. Ireland is also dropping its COVID restrictions, saying boosters helped it weather the Omicron storm. Here in the U.S., demand for testing is on the rise, but the delivery of at-home rapid-tests has been delayed by ongoing supply chain issues caused by a combination of workers calling out sick with Omicron and bottlenecked warehouses. | | | | | | |

CBN News Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: The Omicron surge is overwhelming America's front-line health care workers. The double dose of Omicron patients combined with a dire shortage of hospital workers is slamming hospitals nationwide, including Titus Regional Medical Center in Mt. Pleasant, Texas. Craig DeLisi, M.D., told CBN News that the hospital is admitting its highest number of COVID-19 patients since the pandemic began. Health care workers are struggling to fulfill their duties during this crisis that's dragged on for two years. Dr. DeLisi says his faith helps him cope. COVID-19 deaths in the U.S. are topping 2,000 each day, matching Delta levels. Doctors point out Omicron case numbers are five times higher than Delta's, meaning if Omicron had been as severe as Delta, we'd be facing upwards of 10,000 deaths a day. CDC research shows that while Omicron evades immunity in some people, those who are vaccinated and boosted are 90-percent less likely to land in the hospital if they become infected. Dr. Jay Grider, Chief Physician Executive at University of Kentucky HealthCare in Lexington told CBN News vaccination appears to protect people from the most severe illness. However, Dr. Grider said just because a person who tests positive for Omicron avoids the hospital does not mean they necessarily avoid a difficult time with the virus. Doctors are responding negatively to reports of so-called "Omicron parties" where people get together to intentionally catch Omicron, with the intention of recovering quickly and getting on with their lives. Instead, Dr. DeLisi urges vaccination combined with caution until this surge is over. Many are hoping the Omicron surge will be the last one, and after it subsides the pandemic will finally end.

| CBN Reporter Heather Sells Reports: A new study on men and abortion reveals that half of the men whose partner had an abortion were attending church at the time but that many of them did not feel comfortable discussing the decision with anyone in their congregation. Lifeway Research conducted the survey for Care Net, a national network of pregnancy centers last year. It interviewed 1,000 men whose partners had an abortion and who knew about their pregnancy prior to the abortion. The survey found 51% of the men were attending church at least once a month at the time and 68% identified themselves as Christian. Still, 45% said no one at their church knew of the abortion and half of those polled said they would not recommend that someone with an unplanned pregnancy discuss it with someone at a local church. Care Net Roland Warren told CBN News he's concerned that men aren't seeing their local congregation as a place of help during an unplanned pregnancy. Lifeway Research Executive Director Scott McConnell said men are not likely to share their abortion with anyone at church while they're going through the decision-making process and even afterward. He called the study a "wake-up call" for the church as it thinks about men and their role. Overall, the study found that men often play an influential role in a woman's decision to abort their child. More than 4 in 10 of the men whose partners had an abortion said they encouraged it and 3 in 10 said they didn't give any advice. McConnell sees that as a missed opportunity for men and one influenced by the culture wars. Others said relationship problems were the issue. Warren says that churches must offer ways for couples and especially men to talk about abortion when needed. Care Net is offering "Making Life Disciples," an online course designed to help small groups and churches spur the conversation. Warren said it can all come down to nine days, the typical time between when a woman confirms a pregnancy and when she schedules or has an abortion. | | | | | | |

| Today on Takeaways with Kirk Cameron: Mental health has become a topic of much conversation. Did you know that some say one in four adults suffer from a mental disorder? Anxiety and depression rates are four times higher now than they were just a couple years ago. Studies show that most people who die by suicide often suffer from depression and sadly suicide is one of the leading causes of death in adolescents and adults ages 15 to 24 according to the center for disease control. Anxiety and depression are silent killers and they're often hidden and masked with shame. On today's Takeaways, we're taking the mask off to face these enemies head on. Joining Kirk are two warriors who have been entrenched in the battle against depression and anxiety. Author, Bible Teach & Host, Shelia Walsh and Author, Speaker, & Digital Media Consultant John Seidl. We hope this program will be insightful for those of you who are in the middle of a storm as we address questions like: How do I hold on when I feel alone or afraid? What do I hold on to when I feel like everything is spinning out of control? And for those who are looking for help for loved ones who are battling anxiety and depression, we'll talk about how to equip yourself to become the best friend you can be in times of crisis. We'll also discuss the role of the family of faith in supporting mental health. | | | | | | |

Today on The Kingdom Life: Prophecy. In this segment, Shane Shooter travels to the mountains outside of Vail Colorado at Operation Restored Warrior, where Paul Lavelle and his team allow Shane to see firsthand the life-changing impact of prophetic guidance. Our nation is currently facing a crisis of PTSD and suicide among our veterans and active-duty military personnel. Operation Restored Warrior is bringing miraculous emotional and spiritual healing to soldiers who literally have no hope left. Today, Warriors learn the concept of heart wounds; traumatic experiences that often leave an emotional injury that then influence our behavior and way of seeing the world for the rest of our lives. This program is an amazing picture of taking the gift of prophecy outside the four walls of the church and changing lives.

Tonight on Praise: Rick Warren, Founder of Saddleback Church, Pastor, and New York Times Best-Selling Author of "The Purpose Driven Life: What on Earth Am I Here For?" tells us there is no more fundamental question than 'why am I alive?' He asks the question of existence (why am I alive?) significance (does my life matter?) and purpose (what am I here for?). He explains God's five purposes for our lives: 1. You're planned for God's pleasure. 2. You're formed for God's family. 3. You're created to become like Christ. 4. You're shaped to serve God. 5. You're made for a mission. To fulfill these five purposes love God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength (worship) and love your neighbor as yourself (service). Let God love you because we were created for God to love. Pastor Rick shares his personal pain when his wife, Kay, had cancer, and when his son, Matthew, struggled with mental illness and committed suicide. Out of their greatest pain, Pastor Rick and his wife, Kay, began ministering to families with mental illness and families struggling with the suicide of a family member. Pastor Rick expresses the importance of recognizing the deeper the pain the fewer words should be used. Simply show up and shut up; this is the ministry of presence. Pastor Rick encourages viewers to use their pain to help others.

In a recent year, 47,000 individuals committed suicide in this country, 70,000 people died of drug overdose and many more died because of alcohol addictions. What is happening and, more importantly, what is being done to intervene? Depression and addictions are causing more suicide related deaths than at any other time in American history. Self-harm is not always caused by a gun; often it is a drug overdose or alcohol induced event. On this edition of Taking Care of Business, see the sad realities facing our society and meet those who are trying to intervene.

TBN Special: "I Have a Dream" Celebrating the Legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.: T.D. Jakes gives us the greatest metaphor for this program centering around marriage because marriage is where two different people come together; different genders, different point of views, different ideas, creates disagreements, and yet in order to be successful you learn how to negotiate a way to live together. If we're going to be married on this planet with people who have different points of view, we have to stop fighting, stop the domestic violence, and start listening. Join us as we celebrate the legacy of Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., a preacher whose sermons stirred the hearts of believers both black and white. An advocate whose leadership spurred a movement, turning Americans into activists. A man whose dream awakened the world. And today, nearly fifty-four years after his assassination, we remember his ever inspiring and soul convicting message of justice: MLove. Join us as spiritual leaders Dr. Rick Rigsby, Bishop T.D. Jakes, Dr. Alveda King, Pastor Mike Todd, Matt and Laurie Crouch, Dante Bowe, and more commemorate this civil rights hero and how we the church can continue his legacy of bringing hope and healing to this nation.

CBN News Reporter Paul Strand Reports: African-American Will Ford and white Matt Lockett never expected to become warriors against the racial divide wounding our country. Still, they believe God brought them together miraculously for a profound purpose. Now they're reaching out to a hurting nation in an effort to give it the kind of unity and love they've found, that rises above color. Their story together began when the Lord spoke separately to Will and Matt to go to the Lincoln Memorial the same day. There, at a prayer meeting, they met right where Martin Luther King, Jr. gave his "I Have a Dream" speech, the one in which he said he had a dream that "the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slave owners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood." Now they speak about racial healing. Always nearby is a big old black kettle more than a couple of feet wide, which Will's enslaved ancestors prayed under so their sometimes violent slave masters wouldn't hear those prayers and beat them. But six years ago, Matt and Will's relationship took a blow when they found out even Matt's past and that kettle intertwined. They learned Matt's ancestors owned Will's ancestors. It's a struggle and adventure they write about in "The Dream King." They believe now the nation can hash it out. It's not just a black/white thing. But to see positive change, people will need to get up and act. Matt said he understands many white people may feel they've done nothing wrong racially. Matt prays people won't be dismissive. And there's the mighty love that forgives. They hope people who gather and go through this "Seven Days to Change" retreat together will come to have relationships like Will and Matt's: tested, but a prophetic fulfillment of what Martin Luther King, Jr. dreamed of in the exact spot where God brought Matt and Will together at the Lincoln Memorial.

Tonight on Identity & Gender with Charlie Kirk: Charlie Kirk, Founder and President of Turning Point USA, shares that he strives to bring the message of the gospel and the fight for liberty to high school and college campuses across the country. Everything discussed tonight is gospel centered. It's about setting the captives free from sin, free from confusion, free from calamity, and free from darkness. The topic is gender, transgenderism, identity, and how this all fits with the gospel and American Christianity, focused on getting people to drink from the streams of liberty so they can find its' source. A student panel talks about what it's like to be an open conservative on college campus and the discrimination they have experienced, Critical Race Theory, and their attempts to create Turning Point USA Groups. Kara Dansky, Activist and Author, talks about how the transgender agenda harms women and girls. Cynthia Monteleone, World Champion Track Athlete-400 m and Ericka Brown, USA Olympic Swimming Medalist, share how female sports are in jeopardy by biological men competing. Pastor John MacArthur, Author, Chancellor and Pastor of Grace Community Church, talks about the moral decline and with it the gender confusion that has plagued America. Jack Hibbs, Senior and Founding Pastor of Calvary Chapel Chino Hills, talks about the importance for Christians to care about this issue on a school board, local, and city council level.

Tonight on Praise: Jamie Kern Lima, Self-made entrepreneur, Champion of Women, and Philanthropist, addresses the process of not believing in yourself to actually believing in yourself and seeing yourself the way God sees you. God has given us potential, ideas, ways to serve, to give, or create, but we often doubt it or doubt ourselves. Jamie shares her journey to success, her desire to shift the definition of beauty for little girls and women with self-doubt, the importance of being brave enough to show up as who you are, and knowing that when we do something authentically, it's never been done before. She encourages us that if we can believe in ourselves the way God does and believe what he says about us imagine what we could do."

| CBN Reporter Heather Sells Reports: This week, a male collegiate swimmer who identifies as a woman will compete in the women's NCAA Div. 1 Women's Swimming & Diving Championships. Lia Thomas is the top seed in both the 200-yard and 500-yard freestyle races and will make history as one of the first openly transgender athletes in women's collegiate sports, no matter how he performs. The University of Pennsylvania swimmer previously competed for three seasons as Will Thomas on the UPenn men's swimming team but started competing on the women's team last fall. Thomas began taking hormone replacement therapy to lower his testosterone in May of 2019. Now, in Thomas' first year swimming against women, "Sports Illustrated" describes him as throttling the competition and says Thomas has "set pool, school, and Ivy League records en route to becoming the nation's most powerful female collegiate swimmer. Across the country, a few in the swimming world are daring to speak publicly about their concerns about Thomas in women's swimming. One of them is USA Swimming official who resigned in protest after 30+ years over NCAA and USA Swimming rules that have allowed Thomas to compete against women. Cynthia Millen made the decision late last year after learning that Thomas was competing in women's meets. She described being stunned after working for years to ensure athletes had optimal and fair conditions in which to compete. Millen says she has thrived as a USA Swimming official dedicated to attending to the smallest of details in order to create equal opportunities for all. In a December interview, Thomas told the SwimSwam podcast that he's been swimming since age 5 and has found swimming as a woman incredibly rewarding. He described strong support from both his coach and teammates. Millen said that initially, many in the swimming community thought officials would not allow Thomas multiple opportunities to compete in women's swimming. But those officials, coaches, and sportswriters have welcomed and paved the way for his participation. In January, the College Swimming & Diving Coaches Association of America (CSCAA) issued a statement of support and called on the NCAA to allow Thomas to compete in this year's NCAA women's championships even while it crafts a long-term transgender policy. In February, the NCAA announced it would hold off on adopting USA Swimming's new transgender policy, clearing the way for Thomas to compete. The University of Pennsylvania, Ivy League, CSCAA, and other swim associates have publicly encouraged support for Thomas and condemned any protests. Some UPenn swimmers and their families have raised concerns but have done so anonymously. The mother of an Ivy League female swimmer lamented on a feminist webinar that her daughter would have to compete against Thomas and potentially change in the same locker room. Longtime sports performance coach Dr. Linda Blade says decision-makers at the highest levels are more afraid of being called transphobic than hateful towards women. There are a few exceptions. Notably, Olympic champion Michael Phelps questioned Thomas competing against women in a CNN interview. Erika Brown, a 2021 Olympic swimmer has also spoken out, as has former Olympic swim coach, Dave Salo. Thomas has told "Sports Illustrated" that he's aiming for the 2024 Olympics. In the meantime, he's expected to win individual titles and set new records at the 2022 NCAA Div. 1 Women's Swimming and Diving Championships March 16-19. The ripple effect? No titles for the women that would have otherwise won. Going forward, coaches like Salo and Blade are hoping for a re-organization of sports where those like Thomas can compete but not against women. In the meantime, Millen is watching out for the young athletes who are taking it all in. | | | | | | |

CBN Reporter Heather Sells Reports: The national title Lia Thomas won in the NCAA Div. 1 Women's Swimming and Diving Championships has raised awareness of the threat that transgender athletes pose to women's sports, and the public outcry is escalating. Last Thursday, Thomas beat the University of Virginia's Emma Weyant by over a second to win the 500 freestyle, despite never qualifying for the Div. 1 championship during his three years competing on the University of Pennsylvania's men's team. Thomas is the first transgender athlete to win an NCAA swimming championship. Thomas transitioned to the UPenn women's team last fall, after beginning hormone therapy in May of 2019. Ironically, Thomas' victory comes on the 50th anniversary of Title IX, a federal civil rights law that Congress passed in 1972 to protect students against sex-based discrimination. Since Thomas began competing against women, much of the swim world has either publicly supported him or protested anonymously. But during the NCAA championships March 16th-19th, the public outcry accelerated. Outside the McAuley Aquatic Center in Atlanta, activists supporting Thomas drew attention as did those in opposition. Olympic coach Robert Fausett called on swim dads to protect their daughters, and he called on female swimmers to boycott the championship, saying swim authorities couldn't cancel everyone. One swim dad, Felipe Delgado, who's a former Olympian and owns a swim academy in southern California, tweeted support for his daughter in her race against Thomas and called on the NCAA to change its rules. A "Swimming World" editorial also took issue with current NCAA rules that allow Thomas to compete against women and called the championships a charade. One NCAA swimmer did protest publicly during the championship. Virginia Tech swimmer Reka Gyorgy came in 17th in the 500 freestyle, which took her out of the top 16 allowed into the finals. She issued a statement saying that while she respects Thomas she believes it's disrespectful for trans athletes to compete against women. Concerned Women for America (CWA) has filed a formal civil rights complaint under Title IX with the U.S. Department of Education against UPenn. Its chief issue: UPenn allowing Thomas to compete in women's swimming. It also cites reports of a hostile environment in the locker room from Thomas' female teammates. Whether or not it changes its rules on transgender athletes may depend on who speaks up. Penny Nance, CEO of CWA, says that Thomas may have unleashed a new wave of parents who won't keep quiet. The NCAA championships wrap up Thomas' collegiate career, but he told "Sports Illustrated" that he has his eye on a second act: the 2024 Olympics.

TBN Special: The Rise of Global Christian Persecution. We take an in depth look at how followers of Jesus are increasingly targeted in countries around the world; Open Doors International calls it one of the biggest human rights issues of this era. More than 340 million Christians worldwide are targeted. In the year 2020 alone, close to 5,000 Christians were killed for their faith, a sixty percent increase over the previous year. Close to 4,500 churches or Christian buildings were attacked. Many were burned to the ground. From Africa and the Middle East to Central Asia, China, and even regions of South America, Christians are in the crosshairs. But what about the church in the west and right here in America, which has always been a beacon of religious freedom? While Christians here may be ridiculed or even censored for our beliefs, those experiences can't compare to the suffering of our brothers and sisters in places like Afghanistan and North Korea. But are we Americans invulnerable? Is it possible that in our increasingly secular culture we too could one day be counted among the persecuted church? Guests Mike Pompeo, Former U.S. Secretary of State; Andrew Brunson, an American pastor imprisoned in Turkey for two years; Johnnie Moore, Bestselling Author and Activist; Todd Nettleton, Chief of Media Relations of The Voice of The Martyrs; Petr Jasek, Global Ambassador of The Voice of The Martyrs and Author of the book, "Imprisoned with Isis;" join Erick Stakelbeck to discuss religious freedom.

| CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: According to reports from major cities across the U.S., murder rates rose from coast to coast in 2021. Experts say the spike in homicides began at the height of the COVID-19 pandemic. The disturbing trend continues to grow driven by restrictions and a host of other factors. A member of the Violent Crime Working Group with the Council on Criminal Justice, Criminologist Dr. Alex Piquero's analysis blames the current mix on the ever-present pandemic, social unrest, and division combined with the usual gang and drug problems. In 2021, Chicago, a city long plagued by deadly gun violence saw its deadliest year in 25 years with 797 murders. Los Angeles counted nearly 400 deaths in 2021 and 134 in Oakland. Both California municipalities' murder rates reached 15-year highs. And Austin, Texas, recorded an unprecedented number of murders last year. It is an issue that hits close to home for Sylvia Bennett-Stone. Her daughter, Krystal Joy, and her daughter's best friend died as random, innocent victims from a single bullet after gunfire erupted outside a Birmingham convenience store in 2004. In the wake of the Defund the Police movement, vulnerable families in communities across the country are experiencing the loss of family members and community safety. As the director of Voices of Black Mothers United, an anti-violence initiative of the non-profit Woodson Center in Washington, D.C., Bennett-Stone now helps others who have lost children to violence. She's on a mission to make communities safer by supporting intervention and sensible police reform and pushes back against calls to defund the police. Clarence Page, a journalist and syndicated columnist at The Chicago Tribune, said that defunding police is nonsense because communities need the police. Conservatives blame Democratic leadership in big cities and movements like Defund the Police for the rising crime, an issue that is likely to be front and center in the 2022 midterm congressional elections. Meanwhile, Piquero said while all may not agree on how to solve the problem, there is one thing that everyone can agree on. | | | | | | | | |

TBN Special Report: State of the Nation 2022 Erick Stakelbeck Reports: As the year 2020 came to a close most Americans breathed a sigh of relief. There was hope that things would return to some semblance of normal, that the chaos would finally subside, and that America would get back on track in 2021, but that didn't happen. The uncertainty and instability had only just begun. The new year presented new crisis along with the same nagging problems, some of which only seemed to get worse. As we move now into 2022, those problems are still with us, and no matter your political persuasion, all sides seem to agree that America is in serious trouble. Two years into the COVID pandemic new variants continue to spread and battles over vaccine and mask mandates have driven another wedge through an already divided nation. Speaking of division, right and left have never been further apart. Americans who want to preserve the Judeo-Christian heritage and vision of our founders are at odds with a progressive movement that sees America as a racist nation that plays a destructive role in the world. This battle has spilled into our classrooms where a growing number of parents say indoctrination has replaced education. Crime and lawlessness are on the rise, and murder rates are skyrocketing in major cities. Our borders, insecure, and on the foreign policy front, from Afghanistan to Russia and Ukraine, China and Taiwan, and Iran's nuclear program, there's no shortage of global conflicts that could escalate at any moment. As we move deeper into 2022, the looming questions are, what's next? Where are we headed as a nation? Where is God in all of this? And will things finally get better? We don't have all the answers, but we do have the truth. And over the next hour, we'll hear from members of Congress, evangelists, educators, activists, field experts, and a decorated general who break down the state of the nation in 2022 and what the Church can do to turn these crises into opportunities of faith.

CBN News Reporter George Thomas: U.S. Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) believes what's happening on a growing number of college campuses regarding their COVID-19 protocols is over the top. At Princeton, fully vaccinated students were told in December not to even leave the county unless they were on a sports team. And at Johns Hopkins University, students are required to be triple vaxxed, wear N95 masks or double-masked, and test twice weekly. As the omicron variant continues to surge and universities double down on COVID restrictions, Paul and others say the science simply isn't there to justify the restrictions. The latest CDC numbers show 2,210 people between the ages of 15 to 24 died of COVID in the last 12 months. While 2,018 people died of pneumonia in the same age group. It's why Tyce Patt, and 14 of his fellow students, are suing Ohio University over its COVID protocols, including their vaccination mandate, claiming it's discriminatory. Patt argues the university's rules violate both state law and the Ohio Constitution by not allowing students to exercise their consent to medical treatment. Warner Mendenhall, Tyce's lawyer, has filed similar lawsuits against other Ohio universities. His clients have described to him what happens when students test positive on some campuses. Molly Noble, a parent of an Ohio University student has joined the class action lawsuit. Surveys show the pandemic continues to have a major impact on student's mental health. It's something Dr. Kelly Wolgast, who oversees COVID 19 protocols at Penn State, watches closely. CBN News also spoke to several students around the country who welcomed their universities' COVID protocols. For example, students at the University of Michigan have to be double vaxxed and boosted. Meanwhile, students at Penn State University aren't required to get the jab. Annalise Abraham, a senior at the University of Pittsburgh, said it's also important to consider all the people that students often meet on a regular basis. Mendenhall says it's time for the country to prepare for a potential new reality – that the virus is here to stay and that campuses should also rethink their battle lines going forward.

We are introduced to career firefighter, Billy Parker, who started Disaster City after the bombing of a federal building in Oklahoma, when he realized there was no training facility for that particular circumstance, and many others. Disaster City was built to train Texas Task Force 1, their Urban Search and Rescue program. Instructors from around the country come to teach classes that prepare people for these kinds of disasters. You respond how you train, which is why it is so important to have realism. They also train public information officers to relay the information at hand and take questions.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: As violent crime surges nationwide, police departments are searching for solutions in order to mitigate violence in their communities. One enforcement tactic is the use of no-knock warrants, which too often has led to unintended consequences and death. No-knocks are a result of the Nixon administration's war on drugs. Now, nearly 50-years later, they're often requested for use in high-risk situations involving suspects wanted for violent crimes. The results, however, are questionable in terms of success and overshadowed by injury and death. Fresh on the mind of Americans is the death of 22-year-old Amir Locke on Feb. 2, 2022. Minneapolis police were granted a no-knock warrant, then quietly entered the apartment Locke was in. They announced themselves with guns drawn. Body camera footage shows that Locke was likely sleeping during the early morning raid, then reached for a gun before an officer shot and killed him. In this case, however, the warrant was for Locke's 17-year-old cousin and two other homicide suspects. Locke had a license for the gun that with within his reach. No charges have been filed in this case. The officer behind the gun is on leave as the investigation continues. A deep look into the history of no-knock exposes massive growth and a deadly past. Numerous studies estimate the annual number grew from 1,500 in the early 1980s to more than 20,000 today. And in just a six-year period, between 2010 and 2016, a New York Times investigation found that these raids led to the deaths of at least 81 civilians and 13 police officers. In 31 years on the force, Sergeant McGrew investigated some of Santa Barbara's most violent crimes. The former hostage negotiator and major crimes detective believes in the use of no-knock warrants. Still, Locke's death combined with the high-profile case of Breonna Taylor, shot and killed by Louisville police in her own home, has ignited the effort to ban them. Four states have banned no-knock warrants: Florida, Oregon, Tennessee, and Virginia, while 34 states have some restriction or limitation. Responsible for training Swat teams nationwide, Commander Thor Ells (Ret.) no longer teaches no-knock protocols because he feels the danger outweighs the benefit. He says there are alternatives. Still, he says nothing currently puts an end to the controversial policy. Even though a number of local and state governments have adopted safer alternatives, there is an effort to backtrack somewhat. A Republican-sponsored measure in Virginia's House of Delegates would repeal no-knock bans and work to fix a chaotic situation by implementing a fixed amount of time police should wait before entering. While declining an interview, the sponsor told CBN News it's unlikely to pass. Commander Ells argues it's time to implement safer tools for police to use in their investigations. The challenge, however, is the cost of trying to force a single playbook on the sheer number of agencies nationwide.

Franklin Graham, President and CEO of Samaritan's Purse, talks about Samaritan's Purse navigating the war to aid Ukrainian refugees. Lt. General Jay Garner, Former Assistant Vice Chief of Staff, U.S. Army (Retired) accesses the war and Putin's plans. Darcy Walker Krause, J.D., LSW Executive Director of Uplift Center for Grieving Children talks about the innocent families and children adversely affected by war. Joakim Lundqvist, Pastor of Word of Life Church, aids displaced Ukrainians and expresses the power of prayer in tragedy. We hear from TBN colleague, Vitaly Stebenev, President of We Can!, as he provides a video recording of his journey as he stays behind in Ukraine. In the hour segment we also hear from Rep. Victoria Spartz (R-IN) House Judiciary Committee Member and first Ukrainian-born member of Congress, and Rostyslav Kudin, Pastor of Dawn of Life Church.

CBN News Reporter Caitlin Burke Reports: A growing number of Americans can't remember going through an airport that didn't include enhanced security measures. While mostly effective in keeping people safe, they're also time-consuming and inconvenient. After the terror attacks of 9/11, the security protocol in airports changed, but many of the enhanced measures evolved over time. The Transportation Security Administration (TSA) and its partners are now focused on being proactive, to stay ahead of potential threats. One of the missions of Pacific Northwest National Laboratory (PNNL) is national security, and its researchers are behind much of the screening technology in airports today. Those scanners use millimeter wave technology. The initial technology was actually marketed to be used in apparel fitting. Then, 9/11 catapulted millimeter wave tech to the forefront of national security. PNNL researchers are constantly working on taking their technologies one step further. Now, a second-generation millimeter-wave system is close to being deployed. Liberty Defense developed Hexwave using technology licensed from PNNL. Bill Frain, CEO of Liberty Defense, a technology company that develops security products, says the key differentiator between it and existing technologies is the ability to detect non-metallic threats. Liberty has also licensed a shoe scanning technology from PNNL that can be used inside the Hexwave or existing body scanners. While this scanning tech is a few years away, the Hexwave system will soon be deployed to screen aviation workers who access secure areas of the airport. After that, the goal is for it to be used at all security checkpoints, allowing travelers to pass through without breaking stride. Other interesting technology in the pipeline includes the ability to differentiate powders from liquids in baggage, and a way to detect explosives in their vapor form so that bomb-sniffing dogs are no longer needed.

| Tonight on Praise: Inflation. Bare shelves. Supply chain crisis. Issues that were nonexistent in our minds before the pandemic now affect our daily lives; from soaring gas and energy prices, to a rise in food prices, many of us are experiencing sticker shock. According to the Labor Department, the consumer price index jumped seven percent last year, the fastest pace since 1982. Along with rising prices due to inflation, empty shelves have frustrated shoppers across the country. Store shelves are bare, and in many cases staying empty, as retailers struggle to restock everyday items. The shortages reported nationwide are widespread impacting produce and meat, as well as packaged goods. Supply chain related problems have not been resolved, leaving unprecedented wait times for goods and materials. As Christians, how are we to react to these economic challenges? Does the Bible offer solutions to these issues that we face today? Can we be a part of the solution? How can we make Christ relevant in every situation? Join Bobby Schuller and Shawn Bolz as they delve into the issues of our day from a Christian worldview. | | | | | | |

| CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: Inflation has hit a 40-year high, leaving little room for comfort in household budgets. Once again, the latest inflation numbers from the Labor Department were higher than expected – showing that the problem of rising prices is still far from over. So politicians, economists, and most of all consumers are hoping the Federal Reserve can put an end to it. Consumer costs rose the most in four decades, climbing 7.5% over the last year. Two of the most important categories saw big increases. Gasoline is up 40%. And prices for food at the grocery store soared into the double digits. And although wages have gone up for some – prices have climbed even more. That meant real wages actually fell by 1.7% last year. President Biden acknowledged the problem, using the latest numbers to once again, try and sell his spending plans. But critics say Democratic spending last year made inflation worse, and many in Congress are arguing for spending even more. Now the hope is that the Federal Reserve's plans to raise interest rates will bring inflation down. But those rate hikes could also weaken the economy, and it may take quite some time before they finally slow the rapid rise in prices. | | | | | | |

| CBN Reporter Dale Hurd Reports: You may have seen stickers at gasoline pumps with a picture of Joe Biden pointing at the high gas price while saying "I did that." This is probably one thing for which Biden doesn't want the credit. The White House is blaming skyrocketing energy prices on the war in Ukraine. Prices began rising, however, the day Biden entered the White House, with his cancellation of the Keystone XL pipeline and new moratoriums on oil and gas exploration. Critics accuse the White House of being secretly happy about record-high energy prices, as a way to force Americans off fossil fuels. This thought is catching on so much that now the media is calling it a conspiracy theory, like this USA Today headline: "Gas prices a plot to promote electric cars, conspiracy theorists say." Energy Secretary Jennifer Granholm says the White House is not happy about high energy prices but does see an opportunity. Biden made no secret of his goal to end the oil and gas industry. In one 2020 campaign appearance, Biden told a young reporter, "I want you to look at my eyes. I guarantee, I guarantee we're gonna end fossil fuel." And during a 2020 debate with Donald Trump, Biden pledged, "No more subsidies for the fossil fuel industry. No more drilling on federal lands. No more drilling, including offshore. No ability for the oil industry to continue to drill, period." And in just 14 months, America has gone from being energy independent under Donald Trump to a nation dependent on foreign oil, including Russian oil, even though the U.S. still has abundant energy resources. Despite White House rhetoric, critics say little is actually being done to bring down prices. Biden's Transportation Secretary says if you don't like high gas prices, you should buy a $60,000 electric car. Steve Malloy, editor of the website Junkscience.com(http://junkscience.com/), says despite the White House rhetoric, Biden seems to be trying to keep energy prices high. He explains it here: "Biden's America-Wrecking Climate Agenda." House Democrats now want the White House to declare a climate emergency, banning all drilling on federal lands. | | | | | | |

He shares that we are as a country lending a lot of money that we don't have, to a lot of kids who are never going to be able to pay it back, to educate them for careers that don't exist anymore. Today we have 7.6 Trillion Dollars in student loans and 8.5 million available jobs in skilled trades, and the vast majority of these positions do not require a four-year degree. Myths, misperceptions, stigmas, and stereotypes have routinely discouraged millions of kids from exploring skilled trades. The problem began when we elevated a four-year degree above all other forms of learning. The problem got worse when we took shop class out of high schools. Mike breaks down the S.W.E.A.T. (Skilled & Work Ethic Aren't Taboo) Pledge. The Mike Rowe Works Foundation Scholarship helps students pursue a technical or vocational education. "The S.W.E.A.T. Pledge" is now a 200-page curriculum and pilot program in 30 trade schools. Visit mikeroweworks.org for more information on the "Work Ethics Scholarship." | | | | | | |

| CBN News Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Most Americans, weary after two years of fighting COVID, are resigning themselves to a future that involves living alongside the disease indefinitely. A new Kaiser Family Foundation survey shows 75 percent in the US are "tired" of the pandemic and 77 percent believe most people will eventually get the virus. Still, a third of those surveyed see the pandemic as the country's biggest problem. Medical experts predict the end of the omicron surge may signal the transition from a pandemic to an endemic. When a disease is endemic it is no longer unpredictably disruptive to daily life. Stuart Ray, M.D., an infectious disease expert, and professor of medicine at Johns Hopkins University told CBN News Americans have built up a lot of immunity as a result of the huge wave of omicron infections. However, Dr. Ray points out that one of the challenges with thinking about an endemic state is that's not always a good thing. Right now, it's nearly impossible to get certain life-saving treatments, and that needs to change. As the coronavirus mutates, it tends to become more contagious, according to Jonathan Quick, M.D., adjunct professor of global health at Duke University and author of "The End of Epidemics: The Looming Threat to Humanity and How to Stop It." Often, like with omicron, more transmissible variants are less deadly, but not always. Health experts stress that while COVID-19 remains unpredictable, it will likely transition from a pandemic to an endemic in the months ahead. They warn future surges could be likely, but major restrictions may be less so. | | | | | | |

| CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Before the COVID-19 pandemic even began, America began experiencing a health care worker shortage that's only grown in the last two years. This supply and demand imbalance is expected to get worse unless something changes. A major reason for this crisis is the record number of elderly people in America. This huge geriatric generation is experiencing ever-increasing medical needs. To make matters worse, the large number of health care workers in this age group are retiring in large numbers. Becky Sawyer, executive vice president for Sentara Healthcare, which employs 28,000 health care professionals in Virginia, North Carolina, and Ohio, told CBN News the health care worker shortage is built-in to the country's changing demographics. However, the health care worker shortage isn't just about aging baby boomers. Even before the pandemic, many people left the industry before retirement age due to high burnout rates. The pandemic only deepened this trend. Nearly 20 percent of health care professionals left their jobs in the last two years. Caitlin Krouse, DNP, an Indiana nurse practitioner, and health policy advocate, told CBN News that the pandemic created unprecedented stress levels for all health care workers, the relentless siege of COVID-19 patients has been particularly difficult for nurses, especially when their peers left the field because it caused those who remained to pick up the slack. The shortages run the gamut: lab technicians, aides, respiratory therapists, and more. The Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Subcommittee on Employment and Workplace Safety held a hearing on the growing shortage of health care workers at which time lawmakers were told the U.S. needs 200,000 nurses per year to meet the increased need and America is facing a shortage of up to 124,000 doctors by 2034. In one effort to get more doctors into the field, medical schools are accepting more applicants. However, that's only part of the solution, as there's also a need to increase the number of physician residency positions. Residency is the period of required training after medical school but before doctors get their medical license and can practice on their own. Resident physicians train for three to seven years, depending on their chosen field of medicine. The federal government covers the cost of training resident doctors for the most part | | | | | | |

| CBN National Security Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: Cyber protection is no longer optional. The future is now, and the war in Ukraine has escalated the threat of destructive ransomware attacks to an all-time high. The intelligence community says it's focused on four potential scenarios. As the U.S. focuses on defense, private businesses and government agencies alike are on the offense, trying to hire nearly 600,000 people for cyber security. Jason Blessing, a Jeane Kirkpatrick Visiting Research Fellow and cybersecurity expert with the American Enterprise Institute, told CBN News, when it comes to this critical area, public and private sectors share the responsibility of protecting national security. A breakdown on either end, could have dire consequences. Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency (CISA) is tasked with key roles such as prevention and emergency response, yet, Jen Easterly, CISA Director, struggles to keep her agency fully staffed. Another challenge: competing with private sector salaries. Still, experts say the biggest overall problem is that there aren't enough qualified people to fill all the open positions. The numbers just don't add up: 50,000 people to fill nearly 600,000 jobs. So the tech industry is trying to help fill the void. Microsoft, for example, is providing free cybersecurity curriculum to all public community colleges. Kwame Yamgnane, the founder of Qwasar, noticed another problem is finding experienced educators to teach these skills. His company, Qwasar, provides courses for community college instructors, enabling them to teach what's needed to their students. The hard reality is that there's no immediate fix. In the meantime, however, the average American can be an important first-line of defense against cyber attack. According to Deloitte, 91 percent of cyber attacks start with a phishing email, a message designed to trick unsuspecting employees into divulging sensitive information. So the bottom line is that protecting sensitive data is no longer the sole responsibility of highly trained cyber security professionals, it's a job that falls to all of us. | | | | | | |

Tonight on Praise: Samuel Rodriguez, President of the National Hispanic Christian Leadership Conference and L.A. Times Best-Selling Author, talks about preserving, and why he wrote his new book "Persevere with Power." He explains "the plow" of perseverance is the process and is unique to each individual. The desire is for our children to inherit the mantle of the promise of promotion. He shares that the true battle is between your mind and your mantle. He discovered the real battle is between thoughts that come through your head and the calling upon your life; anointing and anxiety; depression and destiny; his memories and imagination. Rev. Rodriguez shares that we can overcome this battle through the finished work of Christ. He expresses the importance of renewing the mind daily to overcome a thinking process to become driven by ingenuity, creativity, innovation, imagination, hope, and aspiration. He discovered that when your integrity is more important than your influence, nothing can stop you. When your hunger for righteousness is greater than your fear of criticism, nothing can stop you. When we are driven by anointing rather than ambition, nothing can stop us. When your praise is louder than your pain, then nothing can stop you. That is the mantle of promotion. Rev. Rodriguez shares that he is not defined what he does for God, but by what God has already done for him. The faith of our generation will determine the fate of the next generation. Your children will walk upon the ruins of what you bring down in your generation. That mantle of promotion is not just for you. It's for your children and your children's children. It's an alignment and adjustment that will make room for the greatness of the finished work of Christ to be exhibited in you, with you, and through you. Your plow of perseverance is about to lead to a mantle of promotion, a mantle that your children and your children's children will inherit.

CBN News Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: More than 400,000 Americans are now testing positive for COVID-19 every day. The surge after the holiday weekend has shattered all expectations, and it includes a spike in the number of children infected, just as millions of them are returning to schools. Johns Hopkins University reported a million new cases Monday on its COVID dashboard. The massive spike is, of course, due to the rapid spread of the omicron variant, combined with a backlog of cases not reported over the holiday weekend. But with more than 400,000 Americans testing positive for COVID-19 every day, that's a 200 percent increase since before Christmas. And it's a new record high that health experts predict will get worse before it gets better. Currently, more than 100,000 Americans are hospitalized with the virus. While that's up 130 percent from two months ago, the peak was 137,000 set one year ago. Right now, 17 percent or roughly 18,000 of those hospitalized are in the I.C.U., but deaths, which are a lagging indicator, are down about 3 percent since two weeks ago. Children's hospitalizations are up 66 percent over the week before: 378 were admitted last week, which the CDC says is a new pandemic record. One of those youngsters is Sarah Barlow's two-year-old daughter. The FDA on Monday authorized booster shots for 12 to 15-year-olds just as most kids head back to the classroom despite the surge in cases. Some school districts like Atlanta, Milwaukee, and Newark are going back to distance learning for now.

The most needy are in Sub-Saharan Africa. They dedicated their mission to the heart of Jesus' ministry and, since it's beginning nearly 45 years ago, Mercy Ships has provided free medical care and life-changing medical procedures to over 2.8 million people. Their brand new vessel, Global Mercy, will join the 13-year-old African Mercy in serving the nations. If not for the tremendous heart of volunteers, Mercy Ships would not exist. These vessels are fueled by the compassion of surgeons, dentists, nurses, educators, chefs, chaplains, housekeepers, carpenters, plumbers, engineers, agriculturalists, writers, videographers, maritime crew, and even baristas. Every year over 1,200 volunteers, hailing from more than sixty nations around the world, give their time and talents to the cause of Mercy Ships. To learn more visit MercyShips.org.

On this emotional episode of Taking Care of Business we explore the difficult subject of youth suicide. Youth Suicides are now a pandemic in our country. The suicide rate for young people between the ages of 14 and 19 has jumped 70% in the past 10 years. 157,000 young people are hospitalized each year for self-harm. Many feel that this coincides with the launch and popularity of many of the social media apps and platforms. Most young people don't realize that social media sites are not accurate representations of the authentic lives of those using them. Meet young people who tell their stories of how they attempted to end their lives but lived to tell about it!

CBN Senior Washington Correspondent Tara Mergener Reports: Parents from coast to coast are fighting school districts on everything from Critical Race Theory to mask mandates in classrooms. Backlash is also growing over sexually explicit content now available to children as young as kindergarten. Parents who first started packing schools board meetings to re-open schools are focusing on books with explicit and obscene content. That content in question includes sexually explicit books like "Gender Queer," which is a recipient of an American Library Award. The story contains graphic text and illustrations depicting men having intercourse, children engaged in sexual acts, pedophilia, and the sexual fantasies of the then 14-year-old author. Since "Gender Queer" and other explicit books began popping up in more school libraries the outcry is growing louder among parents and politicians. Vowing to prosecute, Texas and South Carolina's Republican governors are demanding statewide probes into how books like "Gender Queer" got into school libraries. Virginia's newly sworn-in governor is using executive orders to help parents reclaim control over public schools. There are numerous efforts underway to recall school board members across the country. Some parents are even running for political office, including Brandon Michon who just entered Virginia's Congressional 10th district race. Several months ago, Michon's rant against school closures in Loudoun County, Virginia at a school board meeting went viral. Not long after, he says he was shocked when his kindergarten brought home a book on transgenderism from school. But resistance to removing these books is strong. Just last month, Virginia Senate Democrats unanimously blocked a bill that would have forced schools to warn parents about sexual content, citing First Amendment rights. Library groups are also weighing in. Members of the LGBTQ community argue the issue is about social justice and inclusion. But many child experts insist what matters most is the children. They warn sexual content for young audiences can have serious consequences. Others are concerned that children who view abusive and misogynistic acts will begin to see them as normal and acceptable.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Over two hundred years ago, President Abraham Lincoln famously said, "Most folks are about as happy as they make up their minds to be." Is that even possible today in the midst of a global pandemic? Christian psychiatrist Daniel Amen, M.D. believes each of us can raise the degree of happiness we experience even in the midst of challenging circumstances like the ones we are facing today. The COVID-19 pandemic sent mental health crisis through the roof. Over the last two years, adult depression tripled while depression and anxiety disorders among children more than doubled. However, says it doesn't have to be that way. After studying more than 200,000 brain scans, Dr. Amen discovered neuroscience techniques that can lead to increased happiness. He then tested them on his patients and found an average 32 percent improvement after one month. In his book, "You, Happier: The 7 Neuroscience Secrets of Feeling Good Based On Your Brain Type," Dr. Amen prescribes different happiness strategies based on a person's personality type. He says there are 16 different types, which are combinations of five main ones. Dr. Amen says while he recommends a targeted approach to happiness based on a person's brain type, there are certain things everyone can do to raise their happiness level, regardless of their personality. The first step involves boosting your overall brain health. Believe it or not, our diet plays a major role in how well our brain functions. The types of foods and drinks we consume directly contribute to the way we think and feel through a complex system of neurotransmitters, hormones, and more. Dr. Amen says good brain health begins with minimizing the consumption of junk foods like sugary, processed foods and drinks that are loaded with chemical additives and lack fiber and other nutrients. Dr. Amen points out the very foods that comfort us while we are eating them, actually make our mood worse in the long run. Dr. Amen says much like junk food, some people tend to reach for alcohol to feel better at the moment, but in the long run, boozy beverages are best avoided. Dr. Amen says supplements can also help improve brain health. While making recommendations based on personality type, he adds just about everyone can benefit from heavy-hitters like a multivitamin, probiotic, vitamin D, and fish oil, as well as lesser-known supplements that really pack a punch. In addition to improving brain health, another key to boosting happiness levels is learning to control our thoughts. Dr. Amen suggests several techniques to identify thinking patterns that lead to unhappiness and how to reverse them. Dr. Amen recommends the Biblical practice of replacing negative thoughts with positive ones. Dr. Amen recommends limiting time online, pointing to research showing social media increases suicide risk in teenage girls, which he believes could be just the tip of the iceberg. Just like with social media, Dr. Amen says many people would likely be happier if they cut back on their consumption of negative news stories. So while genetics and circumstances can play a role in our overall happiness, it appears our choices and habits play even bigger ones.

Tonight Praise Presents: Samuel Rodriguez, Pastor, President of the National Hispanic Christian Leadership Conference, and Author, shares that his family's journey through COVID with his daughter was the primary impetus for writing his latest book "From Survive to Thrive." He tells us that everyone is either failing, surviving, or thriving. Very few people ever thrive. Often people live in perpetual survival mode because they live with the mindset that it's okay just to be okay. Jesus came to give us life and life abundantly. He shares biblical principles to live a holy, healed, healthy, happy, humble, hungry, honoring life. Everything we need to overcome any circumstance is already inside of us through precious Holy Spirit. The moment we thrive our children will no longer inherit our sins; they will inherit our blessings. Lies become lids. There are lies we have to bring down in our culture as well as inside the church. Our children will walk upon the ruins of what we bring down in our generation. It begins with identity clarification. The primary lie that is a lid is that we don't know who we are. He encourages us to stand up and declare that we are thriving because of what we went through. Some people live in a lie. Some people are full of truth, yet they live with a lie, and we are what we tolerate. You can't have truth and lies occupy the same space. We have to remove the lie upon our family, our home, our marriage, our health, our finances, our circumstance, culture, society, and government in our generation for the sake our children and our children's children. Two of the greatest powers we have that are underrated is the power to cry out to God and the power to agree with His word, His will, and His Spirit; it's identity clarification in spite of your circumstances.
