700 Club CBN NewsWatch #07262023	52:30	4:00	REC	PA/O/E	7/26/2023	2:00 PM

CBN National Security Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: Two recent cyber-attacks highlight a new way hackers have found to successfully target businesses and governments alike. The strategy, which is growing in popularity involves bad actors targeting third-party vendors who provide a service used by a network of companies or government agencies. Once the hackers find a way in, they have access to those providers' entire customer base. It's called a cyber supply chain attack, and according to security experts, these types of attacks mean you're only as strong as your weakest link. The two most recent attacks on the cyber supply chain were carried out by two different U.S. adversaries. In the first, Chinese hackers targeted an email security provider, and in the other, Russian hackers infiltrated a file transfer program used by the federal government. The SolarWinds cyber-attack back in 2020 remains the highest-profile example of this kind of strategy. Hackers placed malware on signed versions of software from the IT management system's supplier and then used it to gain access to 18,000 government and private organizations. Scott White, director of George Washington University's Cyber Security Program, says this supply chain hack is being used by both criminals and Advanced Persistent Threats (APT's) like China, Russia, and North Korea. He says protection against this line of attack is especially difficult because hackers could gain access at any point across very interconnected systems. That's especially true for global supply chains, with many countries not requiring the same security standards as the U.S. Research shows why securing these critical supply chains is so important. According to Gartner Inc, 45 percent of global organizations can expect a software supply chain attack by 2025. White says the federal government already offers resources to help U.S. organizations examine their various member networks and come up with a risk management process. While these specific attacks don't always make headlines, they must be taken seriously. In 2022 alone, more than 10 million people, and some 17,000 organizations fell victim to a cyber supply chain breach. That number is expected to rise in the future.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Young people as young as middle school need to know just one pill from a friend or a drug dealer can secretly contain a deadly amount of fentanyl. That's the warning being issued by experts on drug abuse and a father who lost his son to an accidental fentanyl overdose. David Magee, author of "Things Have Changed: What Every Parent (and Educator), Should Know About the Student Mental Health and Substance Misuse Crisis" told CBN News his son William seemed on top of the world. He was a track star and honors student at Ole Miss. Then the unthinkable happened. Beginning in high school and through college, however, William treated his anxiety with prescription medication he bought on the street. After rehab, it appeared William kicked his habit, but after an apparent relapse, his father found William dead from an accidental overdose. Davis learned his son bought and took a pill that he didn't know contained a deadly amount of fentanyl. The grieving father recommends parents talk to their children about their emotions as early as possible. Fentanyl is a synthetic opioid that's up to 100 times more potent than morphine. In fact, it's so powerful only a speck, just two milligrams, can kill. That's the size of a few grains of salt. Drug dealers often add a little fentanyl to the prescription pills they manufacture in illegal labs, where they make counterfeit versions of medications like Xanax, Adderall, Percocet, Oxycontin, and more. They add fentanyl to make the drugs more addictive and keep their customers coming back for more. However, sometimes these pills contain deadly amounts of fentanyl. That's why people of all ages who take pills purchased on the street are overdosing from fentanyl without ever intending to take the drug, even children as young as middle school. The National Institute on Drug Abuse has monitored illicit drug use among middle school children for more than 40 years. Current director Dr. Nora Volkow told CBN News today's numbers represent a good news-bad news scenario. On one hand, she says the number of middle school children who are using illicit drugs is lower than in previous years. However, those who are taking them face a much greater risk of death than in the past. Technology has a major impact in making today's drug trade more prevalent. Kelly Newcom, founder of Brave Parenting told CBN News that parents need to become educated about teen drug use. For example, parents need to be aware that kids who buy so-called "street drugs," such as counterfeit prescription pills, no longer have to meet a dealer in some random alley or on an actual street as they did in years past. Today, all they have to do is make a deal on their smartphone, in some cases right under their parent's noses. The pills are then usually dropped off, even on the front doorstep, disguised for instance, as a food delivery. Psychologists say starting in middle school, teenagers can experience tremendous emotional upheaval. For this reason, many young people reach for pills to feel something different. Licensed psychologist Carolyn Rubenstein, PhD recommends parents try to make their children feel comfortable talking about their emotional challenges, adding it's helpful when parents explain to their children if they ever want to take prescription medication it must be prescribed by their doctor and purchased at a pharmacy. Newcom said parents should try to eliminate distractions when they attempt to discuss drug use with their children.

Health

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Doctors say regular exercise is a key to overall good health. However, if you're someone who thinks working out is boring and lonely, you might want to consider pickleball. It's now the fastest growing sport in America, especially among older people who are looking for exercise they are able to do, that's good for not only the body, but also the mind. Players are thrilled to discover something so healthy is also really fun. Although pickle ball looks like tennis, it's easier on the body. For example, there's less wear and tear on the joints. Pickleball is a slower game and much easier to grasp compared to tennis. Lessons are not needed. Like all sports, injuries are possible. Strains or tears in the feet, back, and shoulder are the most common, especially among older folks. Experts recommend people talk to their doctor before starting a new activity and warming up before hitting the court. Pickleball was invented in 1960s Seattle when two men wanted to play badminton but only had the net. So they improvised using equipment from other sports – a waffle ball and ping-pong paddles. The name pickleball comes from the "pickle boat" in the rowing sport called crew, which instead of utilizing a designated team, uses various oarsmen from other boats. Pickleball surged in popularity during the COVID-19 pandemic, as people searched for ways to exercise outside, while keeping their distance. Health experts like Ashley Gorman, Ph.D., Board Certified Clinical Neuropsychologist with Atlas Neuropsychology, say pickleball offers many of the same brain benefits as ping-pong, a sport doctors recommend to help reduce cognitive decline, largely due to the constant hand-eye coordination. Pickleball can also improve reflexes. Many players say the social element is what keeps them coming back for more. This element is also good for the brain. Exercise can help us sleep better, and vitamin D from sun exposure can improve our mood. So while trying a new sport can be intimidating, especially if you've been on the bench for a while, pickleball can be easy, fun, and very healthy.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Nearly 70 million Americans report suffering from some type of digestive issue, according to government statistics, while it's believed many more suffer in silence. While the causes can vary, some point to an unhealthy diet and say reversing that pattern can make all the difference. While serving as a Bible camp counselor, Jordan Rubin became suddenly ill with an inflammatory bowel disease that became so severe it eventually caused him to lose 80 pounds and the ability to walk. After being diagnosed with Crohn's colitis, Jordan saw dozens of doctors over a two-year period to no avail. Then he met Joseph Brasco, M.D., a Huntsville, Alabama gastroenterologist. That changed, however, when the two embarked on a program for Jordan that finally produced positive results. Dr. Brasco helped Jordan adopt a diet to help balance his gut microbiome. That's the ecosystem of good and bad bacteria in the intestines that scientists have discovered can have wide-ranging health implications. The key for Jordan was to follow a diet plan putting lots of good bacteria, called probiotics, and other healthy foods into his system while staying away from items that led to the growth of bad bacteria. The experience was so profound, Jordan dedicated his life to becoming a natural health expert. He, Dr. Brasco, and fellow natural health expert Dr. Josh Axe, are sharing the plan that turned Jordan's life around in the book "The Probiotic Diet: Improve Digestion, Boost Your Brain Health, and Supercharge Your Immune System. The diet is for people struggling with all kinds of digestive problems. The Probiotic Diet involves taking a daily probiotic supplement, then moving to consume the various foods and beverages containing probiotics, so-called "good bugs," which are various types of living bacteria proven to be good for us. While many of these items may seem new, most are actually very old. Since the good bacteria are alive, like most living organisms, they need food, called prebiotics, to survive and reproduce. Fiber-rich foods, like vegetables, are what health experts consider to be prebiotics, which helps the good bacteria to stay alive and multiply. Other examples of high-fiber foods include fruit, beans, and whole grains. While a healthy gut microbiome involves adding lots of good bacteria and fiber to our diet, it also calls for subtracting other items, like processed foods and sweets, which lead to the overgrowth of bad bacteria. So while millions of people look for relief from painful digestive problems, for some, it can be found in The Probiotic Diet, which promotes consuming fermented selections and whole foods created by God. Modern scientists recently discovered this old plan can help us feel better by achieving the right balance of good and bad bacteria in our gut.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: The World Health Organization (WHO) announced last week that the artificial sweetener aspartame could cause cancer, particularly cancer in the liver. The declaration captured the attention of consumers worldwide because since it was introduced into the food supply in 1980, the product has been added to more than 5,000 sugar-free, diet, and low-calorie foods and beverages including Diet Coke, Trident gum, Jell-O, Log Cabin Sugar-Free Syrup, Equal, Crystal Light, and Zero-Sugar Snapple. It can even be found in health products like toothpaste, chewable vitamins, and cough drops. However, just hours after WHO made the announcement, in a rare move, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) publicly stated they disagree with WHO's classification of aspartame as a possible carcinogenic, largely because of the research the global health organization used to arrive at their conclusion. The FDA cited "significant shortcomings in the studies" the WHO used, and added, "FDA scientists do not have safety concerns." The WHO says unsafe levels of aspartame consumption begin at 40 milligrams per kilogram per day, which is the amount in about nine cans of Diet Coke. This isn't the first time aspartame and other artificial sweeteners have come under fire. For years, doctors have been warning about the impact on the gut microbiome, the balance of good and bad bacteria in our intestines that a growing number of doctors say has an enormous impact on our overall health. Studies show people who drink diet soda are at higher risk for dementia, stroke, and even weight gain, than people who don't consume these beverages. Most artificial sweeteners have no nutritional value, but neither do many natural sweeteners, like sugar. That's why doctors recommend avoiding both.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Heart disease remains America's number one cause of death, claiming one out of every five lives lost. However doctors say many of these deaths are preventable if we make certain changes to our lifestyles, such as lowering cholesterol. More than 200 million people worldwide take a statin drug because of its ability to significantly lower LDL, so so-called "bad" cholesterol. However, statins aren't perfect medicines. Research shows up to 29 percent of statin users complain of side effects. Muscle symptoms, like pain, weakness, and cramps, are by far the most common, but others include stomach problems and fatigue. Patients who experience side effects often stop using statins. But now, there are pharmaceutical alternatives for people who want a medicine to help lower their LDL cholesterol but don't want to take a statin. A Cleveland Clinic-led study shows bempedoic acid is effective and without the drawback some experience with statins. The study involved 14,000 statin-intolerant patients. The group that took bempedoic acid experienced significant benefits compared to the group that took a fake pill known as a placebo. Bempedoic acid did, however, raise a few red flags. In addition to bempedoic acid, doctors can prescribe a number of other non-statin cholesterol-lowering drugs. The American Heart Association announced the top eight ways to achieve good cardiovascular health, such as eating right, exercising, getting enough sleep, and keeping blood pressure in check. In addition to statins and statin-alternative pharmaceuticals, some doctors recommend natural products to help lower cholesterol, such as red yeast rice extract, fish oil pills, oatmeal, and niacin.

Every night in America, over 500,000 people sleep on the streets without a roof over their head. Millions more are homeless without a place to call their own. While homelessness is caused by many factors, in a nation where home ownership should be attainable by any citizen, this is not the case. Many people have given up on the American dream of owning a home. The reasons are many and complicated. Taking Care of Business examines our nation's housing dilemma.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: Teenagers are participating in a dangerous trend that's sweeping the nation. A growing number of America's youths, even as young as 11 years old, are vaping THC, the ingredient in marijuana that makes a person "high." The most recent CDC figures available show more than one in five high school seniors vaped THC in 2020, which was a significant increase over prior years, and likely even greater today. Many parents may know THC is the main psychoactive compound in marijuana but don't realize vaping it is much more potent than smoking a joint. Unlike typical marijuana cigarettes that contain 10% THC, today's new THC vaping devices can concentrate it to a staggering 95%. Nora Volkow, M.D., director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, told CBN News the high-content THC people are consuming can cause serious mental issues. In addition to mental health issues, Dr. Volkow said more doctors are seeing patients suffering from a number of physical health complications stemming from high THC consumption. Further complications include stomach issues, such as cannabis hyperemesis syndrome. Nick Sauber told CBN News he started vaping THC when he was just 14 years old and in the eighth grade. He noticed right away it got him very high, very fast. THC vape pens are small enough to fit in the palm of the hand, and are often smokeless and odorless. That means kids like Nick can vape THC pretty much anywhere they want without anyone noticing. Before long, however, Nick noticed the drug's effect. He quickly became addicted. A loophole in the 2018 Farm Bill, which legalized hemp, also legalized Delta-8 THC vape products, which are synthesized from hemp. That means in addition to cannabis dispensaries, Delta-8 vape pens can be sold at smoke shops, gas stations, dollar stores, and online, in nearly every state. Oftentimes, deliveries can be made to homes with the products packaged in containers that do not reveal what's inside. Manufacturers literally sweeten the deal by adding kid-friendly flavors like bubblegum and strawberry to their vape pens. Aubrey Adams, director of Every Brain Matters, which educates about the health dangers of marijuana, told CBN News people who develop THC-induced psychosis are at a five times greater risk of developing schizophrenia. Likewise, Christian parenting expert Kelly Newcom, founder of Brave Parenting told CBN News parents need to address the issue of vaping THC with their own children. Newcom advises parents to search vape pens online and become familiar with their appearance, because many adults may not even recognize the devices in their own homes because they can look like other common items like thumb drives, ink pens, or markers. Then Newcom suggests parents look for the devices in their child's bedroom or backpack, as well as missing or spliced charging cords, which are often used to power the devices. Newcom says if a child is vaping THC, the sooner the parent discovers the problem and intervenes, the better. Newcom says if a parent discovers, or suspects their child is vaping THC, the parent should confiscate their child's smartphone because that's often the primary tool used to advertise, buy and sell. Parents who confiscate smartphones and still want their children to have the ability to communicate can give their children a kid-safe phone, like Pinwheel. Parents can also use a drug test, available at most pharmacies and online, as a way to monitor their child. Adams said drug testing her son actually gave him an excuse to avoid marijuana while also saving face. Newcom says marijuana in a child's body can be detected long after they consume it. Some kids make THC vaping their drug of choice because they feel it's safer than other street drugs, such as pills, cocaine, and heroin, which can often be laced with deadly fentanyl, without the user's knowledge. While THC vapes typically are fentanyl-free, that could change. Fortunately, Nick got the help he needed to quit vaping THC. He urges others to kick the habit, or better yet, never start.

Tonight on Praise: Matt and Laurie sit down with Sheila Walsh in Israel as she brings her new first-time perspective to the Holy Land. We take a sneak peek at her brand-new series called "My First Trip to Israel with Sheila Walsh." Matt and Laurie talked about his mother's depression, how she was delivered and testified about it for the rest of her life and was so joyful. Sheila talks about growing up with a profound sense of shame because of her father's violence before his death by suicide, and her suicide attempt later in life. They discuss the acts of faith and miraculous healings as told in the Bible when Jesus told the disciples to go to the other side of the Sea of Galilee, the deliverance of the man filled with demons, the woman with the issue of blood, Jairus' daughter, and the centurion. Sheila tells viewers that although we may feel overlooked, forgotten, anonymous, or unworthy, Jesus not only sees us but seeks us out. That has never been clearer to her than since she set her feet on the soil of Israel. Although we think we know the stories, when we set our feet where Jesus set his feet, it changes everything. She will not be the same again. She invites viewers to come to Israel.

Along the way, Pastor Jentezen teaches us that the fact that Jesus bled from different parts of his body, and the fact that he bled from his head speaks especially to this generation after COVID. He bled for our mental health, he bled for the healing of our minds, healing from depression, hopelessness, mental illness, mental distress, trauma, pain, and sorrow. He tells us to keep our mind stayed on Jesus and no matter what's going on he can give us the perfect peace referenced in Isaiah. In the Old Testament he had a temple for his people. Under the new covenant he has people for his temple. We are the temple of the Holy Spirit. Rabbi Sobel teaches us that when Jesus died on that cross, he died that we might find spiritual, emotional, relational, and physical healing as a result of his death and resurrection. Pastor Jentezen and Rabbi Sobel pray prayers of peace for viewers.

CBN National Security Correspondent Caitlin Burke Reports: For the first time since the Cold War, the Navy is expanding its Chaplain Corps. This year alone, the goal is to fill 70 active duty slots, a number that would place one chaplain on every U.S. Navy destroyer. Rear Adm. Gregory Todd serves as the Navy's Chief of Chaplains, a position that also covers the Marine Corps and Coast Guard. Over the course of his career, he's worked as a chaplain in all three branches, responding to Ground Zero after 9/11, and deploying to both Iraq and Afghanistan. With growing mental health issues threatening service members across the board, Todd says chaplains can be the tip of the spear. According to research from Columbia University, Duke, and Harvard, those engaged in spiritual practices are 50 to 80 percent less likely to suffer depression. Todd says the Pentagon's decision to grow the Chaplain Corp is part of an effort to better care for people – a new emphasis on what he calls spiritual readiness. Now it's up to him to fill the vacancies, and he's counting on a new generation to answer the call. While a chaplain at Emory University, Lt. Cmdr. Saul Burleson says God put military ministry on his heart. He now serves as a Navy chaplain on the USS Makin Island. While his sailors are similar in age to the college students with whom he once worked, the job responsibilities look quite different. Lt. Col. Brandon Moore is an Army chaplain. After years of deploying with soldiers, he now serves as a recruiter for the Chaplaincy School at Fort Jackson. As the branch with the largest Chaplain Corp, Moore says the Army isn't looking to grow, but rather to maintain. Military chaplains are required to meet the same age and physical fitness standards as any other service member. Plus there's educational requirements, which include a Bachelor's degree, a Masters in divinity, or some area of religion, and then professional ministry experience. 2nd Lt. Michael Englesgjerd is a candidate in the Army's Chaplaincy School. He felt called to minister to soldiers after his own military service. As he goes through the program, he's learning to view the men and women he serves alongside in a much different light. Three decades into his career, Rear Adm. Todd calls caring for the men and women of the Armed Services a sacred honor and privilege. While the Navy is currently asking for 70 additional chaplains, Todd anticipates a need for even further growth, with the Marine Corps and Coast Guard expected to follow suit.

CBN Reporter Mark Martin Reports: Foreign ownership of American land is a hot-button issue these days, especially when it comes to China. The U.S. city that put this concern on the map is Grand Forks, North Dakota. CBN News traveled there to take a closer look at the pushback against what could be seen as a national security risk. Cheers and shouts of "USA" erupted at a city council meeting earlier this year after Grand Forks council members voted to stop a $700 million Chinese-owned agricultural project. Grand Forks Mayor, Brandon Bochsenski, said that economically, the Fufeng USA proposed development "would have been phenomenal." That economic glow faded sharply, however, after the U.S. Air Force weighed in. Fufeng USA is a subsidiary of "Fufeng Group Limited" based in China. The land at the heart of the controversy is around 370 acres in Grand Forks' agribusiness park. The Fufeng Group wanted to build a wet corn mill there. The property is about 12 miles from the Grand Forks Air Force Base. The Grand Forks Air Force Base is home to military activities involving both air and space operations. Critics have raised concerns of espionage over allegations the Fufeng Group has direct ties to the Chinese Communist Party. U.S. Senator Kevin Cramer of North Dakota did not mince words during an interview on Newsmax. While Fufeng officials deny the plant would be used for espionage, State Rep. Eric James Murphy (R-Grand Forks, North Dakota) had suspicions about the land purchase and supports the Air Force's assessment. State legislatures have considered measures to address foreign ownership of U.S. land, especially after the high-profile Chinese spy balloon flew over the country earlier this year. In April, North Dakota took action, passing a law banning adversary nations from owning land in the state. According to the Agriculture Department, Canada topped the list in 2021, owning 31 percent of all foreign-owned farming acreage. As for China, not including the recent Fufeng Group purchase, the country owns nearly 384,000 acres, which amounts to about .9 percent of the total. Still, lawmakers don't want that figure to grow. In a new bipartisan bill, U.S. Senators Joni Ernst and Debbie Stabenow are pushing back against Chinese acquisition of U.S. farmland. Also on the federal level, a proposed rule change would require foreign citizens and companies to get U.S. government approval to purchase property within 100 miles of eight military bases, including the Grand Forks Air Force Base. People in Grand Forks are happy about this strong pushback.

CBN Reporter Mark Martin Reports: U.S. Air Force leaders point to small drones as one of the top threats now faced in combat. The military site tasked with taking this challenge head-on is the Grand Forks Air Force Base in North Dakota. CBN News traveled there to get an up-close look. Russia's war on Ukraine is bringing drone warfare front and center, showcasing how these unmanned aerial vehicles are used for surveillance and combat. For example, footage reported released by Ukrainian special forces appears to show a drone destroying a Russian armored vehicle and tank. Then there's actually drone-on-drone combat. Another video depicts a drone dogfight, reportedly involving equipment used for surveillance by Ukrainian and Russian armed forces. And it's not just in the air. Other footage shows what appears to be a Ukrainian sea drone attacking a Russian tanker ship in the Black Sea. At North Dakota's Grand Forks Air Force Base, they're not taking the use of drones lightly. The 319th Reconnaissance Wing small UAS program is the first in Air Combat Command to utilize such a program with operators from multiple units. One drone that airmen train on is the quadcopter-style Skydio X2D. The security forces unit employs it to defend the base through perimeter scans or identifying threats from the sky. That function can also transfer to overseas bases. Capt. Matthew Crowell, vice chairman for sUAS Operations, says they also use it for aircraft recovery training, and if required, could fly it to survey a crash site. Members of the Aircraft Maintenance Unit gave CBN News a demo of the Skydio X2D. AMU flight chief Master Sgt. Matthew Roberts says using a system like this to survey and assess damages saves time, money and resources. There are actually two active duty military missions involving unmanned aerial systems operating at Grand Forks Air Force Base. In addition to the Skydio, another unit operates what's called the RQ-4 or Global Hawk. It's the world's largest drone. The 348th Reconnaissance Squadron flies the Global Hawk at Grand Forks Air Force Base. The long-endurance aircraft can reach extremely high altitudes of 50-to 60,000 feet. Captain Mark Cochrane remotely pilots the large-scale system that provides global day or night intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance. Brad Bowman, of the Foundation for Defense of Democracies, calls these drone systems "fundamentally, important" to the U.S. military. And airmen at the Grand Forks Air Force Base are fully aware, describing this tech as a game changer in a time of war and another way Americans can feel safe.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: Reaching potential mass shooters before they pull the trigger has become the goal of a new initiative working to share a message of hope and deterrence. It's called "Let's Talk to Them." The organization started in 2020 following the back-to-back tragedies in Uvalde, Texas, and Buffalo, New York. In those cases, both shooters bought their weapons after turning 18 and used social media as their sounding board. The number of mass killings so far in 2023 number more than any other year at this point since 2006. As America struggles with this epidemic of violence as well as surging mental health crisis, young people are often caught in the middle. It's a morbid connection that suicide and homicide are the second and third leading causes of death for those between the ages of 10 to 24. Given the staggering growth of these violent deaths, national leaders and experts often find themselves dealing with the aftermath rather than planning on prevention. One of the more frightening statistics is the number of deadly mass shootings carried out by someone 21 or younger. That's become a focus for the Let's Talk to Them initiative. Jordan Estrada, acting director of the organization, is certainly familiar with the issue as a first responder. He's spent the last 15 years helping organizations put together active shooter response plans. Using that background and experience, he wants to focus on prevention by connecting potential killers with those willing and able to help. Estrada believes people are looking for a mental health solution without necessarily knowing what that solution is. Ken Churchill, founder of TalentED Ventures is helping finance the initiative. Churchill believes in innovating pathways for societal health. In this case, he points out how big tech's search engine optimization (SEO) on the topic of self-harm can provide help for anyone browsing the internet with self-destructive thoughts or questions – but nothing exists for people looking to commit mass violence. Compare that to search results on a statement like, "I want to commit mass murder" – where there's not one link to help. Instead, you can find step-by-step instructions on how to carry out a mass shooting in Google's top three results. The team is better understanding the mindset of potential mass murders by working closely with someone who strongly considered shooting up a public venue, a man by the name of Aaron Stark. Stark is a mental health advocate, sharing his story of how he strongly considered mass murder until help from a friend stopped his plans. Today, Stark helps Estrada and Churchill try to better understand that mindset. The team is searching for and curating content, media, blogs, and videos that might speak to anyone contemplating mass violence. The introduction page on the Let's Talk to Them website shares their vision to help. However, an undisclosed dark web page is now fully operational, connecting potential mass shooters with redirection content and chat features. The organization says this isn't about surveillance or espionage. Instead, the goal is to be a light shining into the dark corners of the web. Each situation varies, however, so police could potentially get involved. Estrada says the reason for his decision to help is because God's love is for everyone, even some capable of committing mass violence.

CBN Medical Reporter Lorie Johnson Reports: The U.S. Surgeon General says loneliness is now a public health threat so severe that it's on par with smoking and obesity. For far too many Americans, loneliness can become a painful secret, U.S. Surgeon General Vivek Murthy, M.D. said, revealing that he experienced this firsthand. Like many others, Dr. Murthy experienced loneliness as a child, and again as an adult. Last month, Dr. Murthy released a new Surgeon General Advisory calling attention to the public health crisis of loneliness, isolation, and lack of connection in our country. He said loneliness increases the risk of physical ailments like heart disease, dementia, and stroke plus mental ones, including depression, anxiety, and suicide. He adds the possibility of premature death due to loneliness could equal that of smoking 15 cigarettes a day, and can pose a greater health risk than living with obesity. Murthy said about half of adults are struggling with loneliness and even greater numbers of children are. That can be surprising given the fact that many young people are frequently connecting with their peers online. However, Murthy said technology serves as a poor substitute for in-person connection. Mental health experts, like psychiatrist Daniel Amen believe social media can prove to be addictive, and therefore predict the problem will only get worse. Dr. Amen said loneliness was a serious problem in America before the pandemic, but the COVID-19-related shut-downs made loneliness "exponentially worse." He points out that while the pandemic is over, many people continue to remain isolated from those with whom they interacted before the pandemic. Therefore, he recommends minimizing screen time while maximizing in-person interactions. Dr. Amen also believes more public resources should be used to hire and train mental health professionals so they're more accessible and affordable to the people who need them.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: Research shows church involvement with adoption and foster care ministries has dropped substantially in the last five years. But not all is lost. One Ohio church is making its primary goal to care for the orphaned and sharing their success as an encouragement to all churches. America ranks third in the world for having the most orphaned children, according to World Population Review. Almost 400,000 of them live in foster care – and less than half are adopted each year. In the small town of Kinsman, Ohio a local church is hoping to change that by sharing hope by loving one child at a time. Four years ago, Pastor Jordan Biel discovered that in his county, 140 children living in group facilities needed foster families. Today, it has become a vision for the congregation to transform Trumbull County by partnering with the county's children's services to find a loving family for orphan children. The initiative is called #everychild. Over the past four years, 40 children have come into care via families at Rock of Grace, including five adoptions. Church members Melissa and Jason Crisp have been married for 24 years and have four biological children. Still, they've fostered nine more children in the last year and a half. While it's rewarding, Melissa says the hardest part is falling in love with a foster child, only to hand them over to a responsible family member who comes forward. Their desire is to one day adopt. Meanwhile, the process nurtures their faith as they learn to trust God's timing. Churchgoers everywhere are being encouraged to adopt at a time when adoptions have declined in the U.S. A Lifeway Research study found a little more than 2-in-5 U.S. protestant churches say their congregation is actively involved in an orphan ministry. Ohio has roughly 5,000 orphaned children. Nikki Culver, FAM director for Rock of Grace says those lives could be positively impacted for the kingdom if every church in the state stepped in to help nurture them. The same Lifeway Research shows church members providing foster care has dropped almost 10 percent over the last five years. Jordan's church vision came into focus after walking out of his own faith by adopting a little boy named Lucas. And for those who aren't ready to commit and foster or adopt – the church gives volunteer opportunities via its Family Advocacy Ministry, which pairs foster families with church volunteers who provide support by cooking, cleaning, babysitting, and praying for foster families. Melissa Crisp understands how deep spiritual support can go when pouring into the life of a foster child. And with the overturning of Roe v. Wade – experts predict a flood of stress on the foster care system. Foster families know the church will be needed even more to help fill the void. The #everychild campaign is just one example of how churches can make a difference in the lives of children in need. By providing support and care, churches can help these children thrive and reach their full potential.

Tonight on Praise: Matt and Laurie sit down with Dr. Stephen C. Meyer, New York Times Best-Selling Author and Director of Discovery Institute, to discuss the scientific rediscovery of God, which has been taking place over the last century despite what we often hear in the media that science undermines belief in God. There have been at least three major discoveries that are causing what he calls the "Return of the God Hypothesis," also the title of his new book, the idea that the existence of God best explains what we see in the natural world. He talks about atheism, the standard theory, which is the Neo-Darwinian theory, and how science has played an outsized role in the loss of faith among our young people and generally throughout our culture. Dr. Meyer explains the three strands of evidence that suggests there is evidence of design in life, design in the universe, and a designer who is separate from the universe, who Jews and Christians have long called God. The three scientific discoveries that reveal the mind behind the universe: the universe had a beginning, the universe is finely tuned, and the digital and nanotechnology found in cells.

CBN Reporter Brody Carter Reports: A summer camp founder in South Carolina says Christian revival is happening among the age group known as Generation Z, people born between 1999 and 2015. Crossroads Summer Camp, hosted on Anderson University's campus in South Carolina, was founded in 1996 by Clayton King, a traveling evangelist who's reaching the next generation by sharing the gospel and teaching them truth, meaning, and purpose. And research shows that could be why Gen Z is seen as losing their religion. The American Survey Center calls a third of this age group 'religious nones,' meaning no religious affiliation. That's why King and his team are focused on reaching Generation Z with the gospel. This year, more than 3,000 campers accepted Jesus as their personal savior at Crossroads Summer Camp. King attributes this surge in salvation to the goodness of God compared to what the world has to offer. King's wife Sharie, and co-founder of their separate nonprofit called Clayton King Ministries says she sees the Holy Spirit moving in each student's decision to choose Jesus. King's son, Jacob, is also stepping into his role as a traveling evangelist at 20 years old. He is passionate about sharing the gospel with his generation and believes Gen Z is desperate for identity and hungry for truth. Today, the King family serves all age groups through Clayton King Ministries offering marriage conferences, coaching networks, and mission trips. Clayton also preaches at NewSpring Church with several locations in South Carolina. After 36 years of sharing the gospel, King's message remains the same, and he believes this generation is experiencing a genuine revival.

CBN Reporter Heather Sells Reports: The "Sound of Freedom" has passed $163 million in box office ticket sales, outgrossing big-budget competitors and becoming the surprise hit of the summer. All this despite early criticism of the movie by detractors who mislabeled it "Q-anon and adjacent" and called out the politics of star Jim Caviezel. For anti-trafficking advocates who have sought for decades to shine a spotlight on the exploitation of sex trafficking victims, the movie has provided welcomed awareness. Anti-trafficking advocates acknowledge that controversy over the film has politicized the issue in some ways, complicating their messaging. Still, they recognize that "Sound of Freedom" has provided an opportunity to educate moviegoers who want to better understand what's happening in their own communities and take action. Trafficking survivor Lisa Michelle founded Untethered Ministries in San Antonio, Texas, and says she's been overwhelmed with an outpouring of inquiries since the movie debuted. Michelle said she almost didn't see the movie, fearing it would hit too close to home. Along with other advocates in the U.S. Michelle regrets that "Sound of Freedom" focused on trafficking overseas, rather than here at home. Still, she says this summer provides a unique opportunity. In the wake of the movie, Safe House Project has also released new faith-based content for church groups wanting to engage with the issue. Other faith-based anti-trafficking advocates like Shared Hope, International Justice Mission, and Street Grace also provide resources for churches to access. Linda Smith, founder of Shared Hope International, says she hopes that more people will begin to recognize the signs of trafficking and understand how to keep kids safe. Michelle says people often are blind to trafficking in their neighborhoods. For parents, says Michelle, perhaps the most challenging task is keeping kids safe on their phones. That's typically where traffickers, posing as interested friends, prey on children and teens.

CBN Reporter Charlene Aaron Reports: In the year since the U.S. Supreme Court overturned Roe v. Wade, the talk of a federal abortion law has lessened. It is an issue that has now led to new trends in the evangelical adoption arena. Before the historic court action, statistics showed Christians already more likely to adopt than other Americans. Now they are stepping up at an even bigger rate to grow their families and help children in need. Herbie Newell, president and executive director of Lifeline Children's Services in Birmingham, AL said this comes at a time that the battle over adoption has never been greater. When the pandemic hit in 2020, border closings and lockdowns forced many countries to shut down their foreign adoption programs – an impact Newell points out is still being felt today. Newell also said pro-life pregnancy centers must adjust to the changing face of abortion. That includes reaching out to single women who are faced with an unplanned pregnancy. Meanwhile, Lifeline is recruiting kids to help make a difference through an initiative called Stand for Orphans. It is an idea started by kids for kids who need families. Since that first summer, nearly $400,000 has been raised through the program and it is expanding as churches across the country include it in their vacation Bible schools.

Tonight on Praise: Microsoft recently announced that it will soon implement on their Xbox gaming platform a new standardized strike-based system that locks players out of games for violations of the Xbox community standards for up to a year. The system's time-based eight-strikes and you're out rule the relative severity of certain infractions have many baffled. For instance, the penalty for cheating is one strike, however, the penalty for hate speech is much worse, a whopping three strikes. For big tech what exactly constitutes hate speech? For instance, is chatting your support for the biblical view of marriage between a man and a woman considered hate speech? And is the Xbox platform just the tip of the iceberg for Microsoft? For instance, in the future could Microsoft potentially monitor what you type on Microsoft Word, Excel, and then issue strikes against you for hate speech? Corporations are starting to feel the repercussions for going "woke." Target reported its first sales decline in six years after a nationwide conservative-led boycott of the store over its promotion of LGBTQ+ ideology and transgender products for adults and children. As Christians, what role do we play in this modern-day culture war? The onslaught against Biblical values is not limited to corporate America, our children are now in the crosshairs. A Maryland court ruled that parents cannot opt their children out of lessons featuring inclusive of LGBTQ plus books on religious ground stating that families do not have a fundamental right to disrupt public education in the name of their faith. Meanwhile, California's attorney general is suing a southern California school district with over 26,000 students for their new policy that requires schools to alert parents if their children change their gender identity or pronouns. The law alleges the school district's parental notification policy is discriminatory and violates both civil rights and privacy laws. The biblical God ordained family unit is under attack, and the future of a generation is at stake. There is a battle for the soul of our nation. Natural disasters have dominated the headlines. Wildfires burn in multiple states. The wildfire in Maui has devastated the Island. Loved ones are still missing. As Christians, how do we discern the times? How do we comfort those who are mourning? How do we answer the tough questions about God posed to us by a broken world? How do we become the hands and feet of Jesus to a hurting world? On this emotional episode of Taking Care of Business we explore the difficult subject of youth suicide. Youth Suicides are now a pandemic in our country. The suicide rate for young people between the ages of 14 and 19 has jumped 70% in the past 10 years. 157,000 young people are hospitalized each year for self-harm. Many feel that this coincides with the launch and popularity of many of the social media apps and platforms. Most young people don't realize that social media sites are not accurate representations of the authentic lives of those using them. Meet young people who tell their stories of how they attempted to end their lives but lived to tell about it!

Tonight on Praise: Entertainment, pop culture, mass media, social media, vying for the attention of a generation. Content that is contrary to biblical values propagating in arenas, movie theaters, and on personal devices. These occurrences are not accidental but strategic. From boardrooms to production sets, there is a diabolic agenda to infiltrate the minds of a vulnerable world. For many, Hollywood is seen as a dark place, the devil's domain. But the tide is turning in the entertainment industry. Celebrities are coming forward and expressing their faith in Christ. Some are even boldly saying God spoke to me, a statement that would have been vilified not too long ago. Music icon Dolly Parton claims she was inspired to write a song after she had a dream in which God spoke to her in the dream. Hollywood movie star Chris Pratt of Guardians of the Galaxy fame posted on his Instagram the first two verses of Psalm 23. His 44 million followers were instantly exposed to the scripture "The Lord is my shepherd. I shall not want." A righteous uprising has begun. God is on the move. The world is hurting. Evil is on full display. The retail chain Target sold a pride line of merchandise that included clothing designed by a company whose Instagram page is filled with references to satan. One of their designs marketed on their site is called satan respects pronouns. A Grammy Award show performance by Sam Smith flaunted satanic themes. What was once done in secret now is peddled in the open. As Christians, how are we to discern the times? Are we to simply curse the darkness or is there more that can be done? How can we become light in dark places? People are hungry for more and God can use you to touch the hearts of those within your sphere of influence. God is still speaking and shaping culture. Can you perceive his voice? Are you listening to what he has to say? Join Shawn Bolz and Hollywood industry insider Tim Davis now as they discuss how God is moving in powerful ways. Tim also shares his journey in the entertainment industry and encourages viewers to pray for the salvation of this culture or the influence of people like them in this city. Tim encourages those who are called to the secular mainstream industry to bring the love of Christ and the love of the Father to a people who desperately need it, who are searching in all the wrong places for the love and the approval and the acceptance that they so long for.

The Eric Metaxas Show #177	24:30	24:30	REC	PA/O/E	9/29/2023	5:00 PM

Today on the Eric Metaxas Show: Jacqueline Fritschi-Cornaz, Actress & Co-Producer of the film Mother Teresa & Me talks about her first encounter with street children, how the film came to be, how she prepared for the role of Mother Teresa, and describes the life of Mother Teresa who was a teacher, went into the slums and built schools. Through the film she is able to give all the revenue to the poorest children for education and healthcare. She hopes to inspire the young generations to think and reflect on their values and to create their own visions and to stick with them even in times of troubles and doubts as Mother Teresa did. She talks about her career and the message of her work, and the process of the film. The film wants to inspire people to live with more love in action. It's a fathom event.
