

Independent Hendren – 1            DM/MEH            11/8            MonPM

Recent elections for governor in New Jersey and Virginia, have at least one Arkansas state senator believing the best path forward is through the middle. On this week’s episode of Talk Business and Politics, Senator Jim Hendren, who left the Republican Party earlier this year to become an independent, said his bipartisan group Common Ground Arkansas plans to support moderate candidates.

News22      0:21            “...running the show.”

Hendren of Gravette said he will run for reelection. The state’s newly drawn political maps will leave a number of legislative seats open in northwest Arkansas. You can hear more of the interview with Hendren tonight at 6 on Talk Business & Politics here on KUAR.

Independent Hendren – 2            DM/MEH            11/8            MonPM

Moderate voters in Arkansas could have more influence in next year’s elections, according to state Senator Jim Hendren of Gravette. On this week’s episode of Talk Business and Politics, Hendren, an Independent from Gravette, said a significant number of voters in the state don’t identify as Republican or Democrat.

News23      0:20            “...the ’22 elections.”

Hendren left the Republican Party earlier this year to become an Independent and formed the bipartisan group Common Ground Arkansas. Hendren, who had served as Senate president two years ago, says he is planning to run for reelection next year. You can hear more of the interview with Hendren tonight at 6 on Talk Business & Politics here on KUAR.