GUIDANCE PURPOSES ONLY AND IS NOT FOR BROADCAST.

Dateline will report the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety's Top Safety Picks on Sunday, December 4th. This is the first time that the institute has produced such a listing, which identifies the cars that scored highest in all three of its crash tests---side, front, and rear.

The ten cars chosen as Top Safety Picks include models from:

Audi
General Motors
Honda
Saab
Subaru
Volkswagen

It is possible that some of this coverage will also appear on Today on Monday, December 5th. The Insurance Institute is expected to release footage and additional data to News Channel for your news broadcasts on Monday.

More about Dateline Friday - "To Catch a Predator":

-Last fall, "Dateline's" Chris Hansen investigated an epidemic spreading throughout America - men trolling Internet chat rooms in pursuit of children. Now one year later, he's back with yet another shocking report about the threat of online sexual predators.

Hansen and NBC News set up their hidden camera investigation in an upscale home in a Washington D.C. suburb. Members of a group called Perverted Justice, an Internet watchdog group, pretended to be 12 to 14 year old children chatting online. Within hours, adults solicited the undercover operatives for sex. Some sent graphic sexual images to what they believed were minors. Soon, many of those same men actually show up at the house for a rendezvous with the child.

Instead, they are confronted by Hansen. Most of the men claim their intentions were innocent. Some of the most alarming cases involve seemingly prominent members of the community: a Rabbi, a special education teacher and a doctor. The hidden camera investigation exposes 19 men in three days, giving viewers a frightening glimpse at how widespread the problem is.

With consumer groups warning parents that adults looking for sex frequently approach U.S. children who are online, the report will also include advice for parents about how to protect their children from this pervasive danger.

The hour-long broadcast airs tonight at 8:00 PM.

-Stone Phillips interviews NASCAR legend Rusty Wallace about his career and life after his upcoming retirement.

(B-roll and soundbites from the above interview are now available on VOD under: FE30R & FE30Ra DTL SUN NASCAR. You may wish to use this material in any of your wkd. newscasts to promote to the full interview airing on Dateline Sunday.)

-In the wake of high-profile incidents involving sports fans drinking too much at sporting events, many concession companies vowed to prevent patrons from being over served. "Dateline" uses hidden cameras to find out if they have complied, or if the drinks are still flowing too freely. Edie Magnus reports.

-Lea Thompson has the latest results of side impact crash tests conducted by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety. The following vehicles will be tested on Sunday's broadcast: 2005 Toyota Sienna, 2006 Nissan Quest, 2005 Honda Odyssey, 2006 Ford Freestar, 2005 Mazda MPV.

*A special affiliate pkg for tonight's Dateline is now available on VOD.

It is slugged: FE30R DTL FRI JESUS and runs 1:41.

-It's a story we all think we know -- the Birth of Jesus. But, scholars say there may be more to the story of Jesus and his mother, Mary... that you don't know: How old was Mary when she gave birth? Was Bethlehem really the place where Christ was born? And how revolutionary was the message brought by this baby boy? An extraordinary hour about a birth that changed the world.

Dateline will follow up on last year's investigative report on sanitary conditions in major chain fast food restaurants across the country with an update scheduled for ~~Sunday, March 13th~~. Health inspection reports filed on 1,000 randomly selected restaurants were analyzed to determine the number of critical health violations per chain, as well as the number of violations per inspection.

The chains included in the report are:

Arby's	KFC
Burger King	McDonald's
Dairy Queen	Subway
Hardee's	Taco Bell
Jack in the Box	Wendy's

Results of the investigation have already been shared with the managements of those chains for their comment.

Dateline has broken down the national data regarding critical violations by state and is prepared to make that information available to NBC stations to assist them in preparing their own reports. Kim Grabina will soon notify your newsrooms about how to obtain that data.

Given the nature of the content in this report, please make sure that your sales and traffic departments are aware of this scheduling.

Dateline continues the coverage of NBC News with reports from Asia on the devastating aftermath of the tsunami.

Tonight's reports will include:

-Behind the often booming tourism industry, Thailand is a nation made up of 65 million people, most of whom are very poor. Hoda Kotb ventured to the country's rural areas to see what the killer wave left behind for its people.

-As medical aid and supplies come pouring in to help the victims of the tsunami, many are realizing that the people of the region are facing more than just physical wounds. Ann Curry reports from Sri Lanka where doctors face the challenge of mending broken hearts and souls.

-Stone Phillips takes a closer look at the unprecedented flood of donations that have been pledged to help the victims.

-Edie Magnus asks if it happened in South Asia, could the next devastating tsunami hit the US?

PLUS...

-The latest on Andrea Yates, the Texas mother who in 2001 was convicted of drowning her children. On Thursday, an appeals court in Texas overturned her murder conviction, after finding that an expert witness for the prosecution provided false testimony in her trial. So what happens next? Rob Stafford reports.

"SHADOWS OF SUSPICION"

-Correspondent Hoda Kotb follows the case of 14-year-old Robin Gilbert from Reading, MA.

In 1975, Robin Gilbert was found dead on a golf course a half mile away from her home. Though there were marks on her face and neck, and her clothes were torn off, the state medical examiner determined that it was not foul play, but an undiagnosed heart problem that killed the young girl. However, nearly two decades later, an extraordinary tip would re-ignite the investigation and force the police to take a second look at the case. In October of 2004, nearly 30 years after Robin Gilbert's death, a former friend and neighbor of the Gilbert family was arrested and charged with her murder.

PALLADIUM MURDERS

Correspondent: Stone Phillips

Thirteen years ago, David Lemus and Olmedo Hildago were convicted of second-degree murder of the Palladium nightclub bouncer, Marcus Peterson. Three years ago, "Dateline NBC" was granted access to Bronx homicide detectives Bobby Addolorato and John Schwartz as they set out to re-investigate the murder, after new evidence emerged suggesting that David Lemus and Omeldo Hidalgo might be innocent. "Murder at the Palladium," is an exclusive, behind-the-scenes look at two NYPD detectives' search for the truth that includes exclusive interviews with defendants Lemus and Hildago, eyewitnesses to the crime, family members, attorneys, and the foreperson of the jury, Carol Kramer, who convicted the men and is now asking for their release.

KILLING IN CASCADE COUNTY -- A DATELINE - COURT TV NETWORK EXCLUSIVE

On the Friday before Labor Day weekend 1964, Jim and Lois Arrotta were found stabbed to death in the back of the grocery store which Jim managed, in Great Falls, Montana. Despite a frantic police investigation, the killer or killers were never caught.

However, many years later in 2001, the seven Arrotta children who were left orphaned when their parents were murdered and who were now adults, asked the police to look into the case one last time.

A former store employee named Alan Reavley was called in for what police thought would be routine questioning; but shortly after the session began, Reavley told police that soon after the murders, he asked his psychiatrist whether he might have been involved with the murders. Based on that startling development, and some other circumstantial evidence, Reavley was arrested. But it was only after the arrest became public that police discovered there were other secrets in Reavley's past.

MURDER-FOR-HIRE -- Caught on video by hidden cameras and microphones, Dateline takes an in-depth look at ordinary people trying to hire hit men. This hour-long report will tell the stories of four people trying to hire hit men, who turned out to be undercover police detectives.

The four stories include:

-The case of Dr. David Mackay, a noted surgeon who tried to hire a hitman to kill a business associate. Dateline will have the first interview with the undercover officer who posed as the hitman

-The case of Kenneth Pollak, a case where detectives had the ex-wife pose dead for a photograph that was delivered to the ex-husband who wanted her killed. Dateline has the first sit-down interview with her and her children.

-The case of Jay Roach, who tried to hire a hit man to kill his wife whom he was embroiled in a bitter divorce with. Dateline will have first-ever interview with the kids.

-Plus, the case of Courtney Jacob, who was convicted of trying to hire a hit man to kill her husband. The interesting part is that he stood by her, through her prison sentence and they remained together when she got out.

Story Line & Credits:FATHER'S QUEST

Correspondent: Hoda Kotb

-Hoda Kotb reports on a father's attempt to get justice after the death of his 17-year-old son.

At 17, Chase Moody was an angry and defiant teenager. When he began using drugs, his parents sought help for him at a therapeutic wilderness camp called "On Track". Nestled on a 6,000-acre wildlife preserve near Austin, Texas, the nearly month-long program -- billed as learning through nature - is geared to help kids with emotional and behavioral issues. However, just six days into the program Chase died. Counselors say Chase had to be restrained after he got violent with them and that his death was a accident, but his father was determined to prove otherwise.
