Report: Farm Bill Budget Cuts Threaten Great Lakes

Anne Arbor, MI – The farm bill comes up for reauthorization in September and a new report from the Healing Our Waters-Great Lakes Coalition warns that proposed cuts in the bill threaten the restoration of the Lakes. Comments from Jordan Lubetkin (loo-BEI-kin), regional senior manager, communications, Great Lakes Center, National Wildlife Federation; and Wisconsin farmer Rodell Lea (rod-EL LEE)

Intro: With the Farm Bill up for reauthorization in September, a new report by the Healing Our Waters-Great Lakes Coalition warns that proposed cuts to it threaten the Great Lakes. The report points out that farm conservation programs funded by the farm bill have lost more than 1 billion dollars in the last two budgets and more cuts are proposed. Jordan Lubetkin with the National Wildlife Federation's Great Lakes Center says when farmers lose federal funding for preventive measures like those that keep soil from eroding, the Great Lakes suffer.

Cut 27178 :12 "They're seeing a resurgence of some of these water quality problems that we hadn't seen since the sixties and seventies. One of the main factors is excessive fertilizers and manure that runs off into waters."

Tag: President Obama's budget calls for more than 400 million dollars in cuts to farm conservation programs. The Republican house budget calls for those programs to be cut by 16 billion.

Second Cut: Rodell Lea has been farming in Wisconsin all his life. The farm bill provides subsidies so that he can farm in a way that prevents water pollution.

Cut 28178 :10 "We don't till the ground any more than we have to. And I have a buffer strip of sixty-six feet on each side of my drainage ditch to protect from any soil going into the water stream."

Third Cut: Lea says he won't use up his land with just one crop such as corn or soybeans. And he says planting hay on the hillsides where soil could erode is something he learned a long time ago.

Cut 29178 :12 "My father taught me, you keep the hillsides in hay. I don't care what the price of grain is you always want to save the soil and I guess that was embedded in me all through my farming years."

Fourth Cut: Lubetkin says a lot of these practices are common sense solutions that produce long-term results.

· ' Cut 30178 :09 "Cutting these programs will not save the taxpayer one penny. Cutting these programs will actually cost more money because the problems will only get worse and more costly to solve."

Tag: The report says that for the last three years there has been a bi-partisan effort to restore the Great Lakes, and cutting farm programs that prevent problems will set back that effort. The Republican House budget proposes 180 billion dollars in overall farm program cuts over ten years.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses first soundbite(s)

LEAD: With the Farm Bill up for reauthorization in September a new report by the Healing Our Waters-Great Lakes Coalition warns that the Great Lakes could be the big losers if proposed cuts in the bill are approved. Mary Anne Meyers explains.

Mother Whose Son Died in Texting and Driving Accident to Speak at Saint Mary's

April 17, 2012 (Notre Dame, Ind.)—Saint Mary's College students are proud to host a talk on the dangers of texting and driving. Diveeta Thompson, founder of Stop Texting AND Distracted Driving (STANDD) is the featured speaker. The engagement, which is sponsored by the College's Student Involvement and Multicultural Services office and Anthony Travel, will be held Wednesday, April 25 at 5:30 p.m. in the Student Center Lounge, on the main level of the Student Center (campus map). Also speaking will be Lt. Tim Williams of the Mishawaka Police Department. The event is free and open to the public. Young drivers are encouraged to attend.

In October of 2008 Diveeta Thompson's 18-year-old son, Rodney Thompson II, lost his life because of distracted driving. According to the STANDD website texting, music, and speed were all likely factors in the crash. When the teenager reached for his phone to receive or send a text, he lost control of his car. In an effort to prevent other families from experiencing the pain of losing a loved one, the mother started STANDD. The Fort Wayne resident has taken her powerful message to local high schools, colleges, radio public service announcements (PSAs) and even the Oprah Winfrey Show. She is passionate about lending her voice to save the lives of others. In doing so, she can assure that Rodney is remembered.

"Knowledge is power and many are not aware of the dangers of distracted driving," Thompson said. "In between life and death, there is so much one is purposed to do, and because of distracted driving this was taken away from my son. In an effort to save lives, I lend my voice and my pain, because no one should endure the loss of a loved one."

Morgan Carroll, a Saint Mary's freshman, is the coordinator of the event. Carroll, also from Fort Wayne, heard Thompson speak at her high school last year. She was so inspired by Thompson's message that she felt inclined to share it with others.

"I talked to Diveeta personally and she is always looking for help to spread the word against texting and driving," Carroll said. "When I mentioned the idea of her coming to Saint Mary's, she was all ears for the possibility."

Carroll says Thompson's speaking engagement will be inspirational and educational for not only Saint Mary's students, but the public as well.

"Distracted driving is overlooked and people do not realize the negative impact it can have on lives," Carroll said. "Seeing it through a firsthand experience, like Ms. Thompson's, can open one's eyes to the reality and truth behind it all."

Gwen:

Is it possible to arrange a TELEPHONE interview TOMORROW (Wed, 4/18) with Ms. Thompson?

I am available all day...and can do the interview at any time.

It would take about 5 to 10 minutes and I would replay the full interview on our morning news program on Thursday morning to help promote the program.

Please let me know.

PENTAGON / WH CONDEMN IMAGES APPEARING TO SHOW US TROOPS POSING WITH DEAD BOMBERS, BODY PARTS IN AFGHANISTAN

The Pentagon & the WH on Wednesday condemned a report that U.S. troops posed for pictures with the mangled bodies of insurgents in Afghanistan. The Los Angeles Times released the purported images Wednesday morning, and reported that they showed soldiers with the 82nd Airborne Division in 2010. One photo showed what appeared to be U.S. troops, some smiling, holding up a pair of severed legs. The military said Wednesday it has launched an investigation. Defense Secretary (Leon) Panetta strongly rejects the conduct depicted in these 2-year-old photographs," Pentagon spokesman George Little said in a statement. "These images by no means represent the values or professionalism of the vast majority of U.S. troops serving in Afghanistan today." Little said the probe could lead to "disciplinary measures," and that "anyone found responsible for this inhuman conduct will be held accountable in accordance with our military justice system." Little also said Panetta was "disappointed" that the Los Angeles Times published the photos, as "this material could be used by the enemy to incite violence against U.S. and Afghan service members in Afghanistan." "U.S. forces in the country are taking security measures to guard against it," he said. The Times published a couple photos, but claims to have 18 in its possession. According to the article, the photos were provided by an American soldier worried about a possible breakdown in leadership. The Times reported that the photo of the severed legs was taken after U.S. soldiers arrived at a police station on orders to identify the body of a suicide bomber.

How will this investigation be handled? Could the release of these photos end up putting troops in harm's way?

TSA NEW CHECK IN MACHINES

The Transportation Security Administration has started testing new hi-tech check-in systems that will scan and verify passenger boarding passes with photo IDs, marking the agency's latest effort to expedite the pre-boarding experience and make it safer for fliers. The new "fraudulent document detection technology" uses security features embedded in photo IDs to make sure that both the ID and boarding pass are authentic and match one another. Known more formally as "credential authentication technology," it can also identify alerted or fraudulent photo IDs. The systems, which are currently being piloted at Washington Dulles International Airport and will be tested at Houston George Bush Intercontinental Airport and Luis Munoz Marin International Airport in the coming weeks, are a part of the TSA's effort to move toward a more risk-based, intelligence-driven counterterrorism approach. The new security measures, which help the TSA focus on those passengers that it knows the least about, are a part of efforts to "address evolving threats and improve the passenger screening experience." TSA Administrator John Pistole said the ability to efficiently and effectively identify fraudulent IDs has the potential to "not only improve security but also the checkpoint experience for passengers."

How does this work? Is it safe?

15-YEAR-OLD TX BOY CHARGED WITH MURDER AFTER ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS DIE IN CRASH
A van crash that killed nine suspected illegal immigrants in Texas has now become a murder case for the juvenile suspect at the center of the accident. Over a dozen people were packed into a van designed to hold far fewer, and when it rolled over in Palmview, Texas last week, nine people died. Authorities say the person driving that van was a 15-year-old south Texas boy, and he's now facing nine counts of murder and 17 counts of smuggling humans into the country. The police chief says the boy drove the van because his family had been threatened. No word yet on whether the teen will be tried as an adult.

Is this a clear-cut case of murder?

CELEBS AND THEIR ANTI-OBAMA RANTS

Secret service looking into Ted Nugent's violent anti-Obama rant: The U.S. Secret Service is reportedly investigating faded '70s rock star Ted Nugent for his recent insistence he'll be "dead or in jail" in a year's time if President Barack Obama is re-elected in November. At a convention of the National Rifle Association over the weekend, the longtime gun advocate compared Obama and the Democrats to a coyote who should be shot. "It isn't the enemy that ruined America," he said as he reaffirmed his endorsement of Republican front-runner Mitt Romney. "It's good people who bent over and let the enemy in. If the coyote's in your living room pissing on your couch, it's not the coyote's fault. It's your fault for not shooting him." He accused the Obama administration of being "evil" and "America-hating." "If Barack Obama becomes the president in November again, I will either be dead or in jail by this time next year," he said angrily. "We need to ride into that battlefield and chop their heads off in November." AND Robin Leach: Obama Is a 'Socialist' - He Is 'Whipping Up This Racial War and This Economic Divide: Former Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous host Robin Leach said Friday that President Obama is a socialist. Appearing on the Fox Business Network, Leach told host Neal Cavuto the current White House resident is "whipping up this racial war and this economic divide". NEAL CAVUTO, HOST: The White Ho use itching to slam the rich nonetheless by taxing them out. But lots of states are trying to actually reel them in. In South Carolina for example, they are pushing big tax breaks for billionaires who invest in small businesses. My next guest says that's a good idea, and he knows or two about the rich. He made a living by following how rich folks were living. Former "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous" host Robin Leach who has I think one of the most distinct voices on the planet. I would love you to do like my answering machine, "You've reached the Cavuto residence." No. How are you? ROBIN LEACH, VEGASDELUXE.COM HOST: Hello. I'm very well, but unfortunately, Neil Cavuto is out at this moment driving in his open top Rolls Royce along the beaches of the San Tropez. CAVUTO: Just set it to record. You are not a fan of what is going on here. LEACH: No, I think it is deadly dangerous and I don't use those two words lightly. Look, what Obama is proposing you've got to cut right down to it, it is socialism. It is so ugly and evil. It doesn't work - it's never worked. And we went through this in Britain until Maggy Thatcher and rescued us from a fate worse than what's going to happen here. CAVUTO: He takes great umbrage to that socialist description. LEACH: Of course, because it is the truth.

Should celebrities like Ted Nugent and Robin Leach apologize for their comments?

But friends of Detroit-area florist Mark Dikowski say it's stories like Mark's that have put them in the same camp with the President. When Dikowski lost his partner of 17 years unexpectedly, his life was turned upside down and now he has just a few more days to close a deal to buy back his home from his partner's family. President's Support for Gay Marriage No Help for Gay Michigan Widow

Detroit, MI - Some Michiganders say President Obama's support for gay marriage is a step forward, some say it's wrong. But friends of Detroit-area florist Mark Dikowski say it's stories like Mark's that have put them in the same camp with the President. When Dikowski lost his partner of 17 years unexpectedly, his life was turned upside down and now he has just a few more days to close a deal to buy back his home from his partner's family. Comments from Arthur Mullen, executive director of the Mount Clemens Downtown Development Authority, who helped to organize a "cash mob" fundraiser for Dikowski.

Intro: The President's support of gay marriage has a lot of Michiganders talking about the issue. Arthur Mullen with the Mount Clemens Downtown Development Authority says he considers it an important issue because of what happened to a friend, Mark Dikowski. Mullen helped to organize a "cash mob" fundraiser at Dikowski's floral shop recently because Dikowski's life has been turned upside down by the sudden loss of his partner.

Cut 74178 :14 "They had just bought a house together, pretty much their dream home. They were getting their wallpaper delivered that they had ordered from England. Mark's partner passed away unexpectedly of a heart attack at 55."

Tag: That was two years ago, and because Michigan law does not support gay marriage or civil unions, and the family of Mark's partner doesn't either, Mark has been in and out of court trying to save his home. With the deadline just a few days away, neighbors and friends have been swarming his floral shop with business in hopes of raising money and awareness of issues facing same sex couples.

Second Cut: Mullen says to him, this is a horrible example of the need for equal rights for committed couples.

Cut 75178 :17 "Here is a couple that lived together monogamously, in a loving caring relationship for 17 years. Mark has had very little time to really mourn Gary's death because he's been in this limbo about property and where he's going to live."

Third Cut: Mullen says by not having his name on the deed and not having any kind of legal arrangement, Mark is in a precarious situation.

Cut 76178 :08 "So now what's happening is, Mark is being forced to buy his house back from his brother-in-law."

Tag: Cash mobs encourage groups of people to go into a local business and spend a lot of money all at once to give the owner a bit of an economic stimulus. Mullen says he hopes boosting business at Mark Dikowski's shop will help him to put his life back together again.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses first soundbite(s)

LEAD: The President's support of gay marriage has a lot of Michiganders talking about the issue. Arthur Mullen, with the Mount Clemens Downtown Development Authority says even though he himself is not gay, he considers it important to speak out now because of what happened to his friend, Mark Dikowski. Mary Anne Meyers has the story.

Violence Against Women Act Stalls – Mich. NOW "Condemns" House version

Lansing, MI – The Violence Against Women Act has been reauthorized twice since it passed in 1994 with bipartisan support, but this year it's embroiled in a political battle. Comments from Mary Pollock (PAHL-ik) legislative vice president, Michigan chapter of the National Organization for Women.

Intro: The Violence Against Women Act has been renewed twice with bipartisan support since originally passed in 1994, but this year's reauthorization has become the object of an election year political battle. The Senate passed a version of the bill that includes immigrants, Native Americans, and L-B-G-T victims of domestic abuse. The House passed a version that excluded those protections. The National Organization for Women is opposed to the House version. Mary Pollack, with Michigan NOW, says that's because the House bill excludes many domestic abuse victims who historically have fallen through the cracks.

Cut 85178 :11 "Especially immigrant women are especially vulnerable because some of them are victims of domestic violence and are very afraid of calling the police or calling for help."

Tag: Leaders of more than 30 religious groups are also opposed to the House bill because they say it rolls back current protections for "battered non-citizens." House Republican leaders say their bill protects all victims and that there is no reason for the bill to single out certain groups.

Second Cut: Pollock says the two Senators from Michigan did the right thing by voting for the Senate reauthorization bill.

Cut 86178 :07 "It's the bill that we want, and the Republicans seem to be dead set against anything that women's rights advocates want."

Third Cut: Proponents of the Senate bill cited studies that show the rate of domestic abuse among lesbian, gay, and transgender people to be about the same as the general population, yet that abuse is reported less. Pollock thinks House Republicans are afraid to face reality.

Cut 87178 :13 "They cannot vote on anything that recognizes that there may be more discrimination against that group than other groups. It is the civil rights topic of our time."

Tag: Pollock calls the House bill anti-gay, anti-woman and anti-immigrant. House Republicans accuse Senate Democrats of playing politics with the issue. The Violence Against Women Act expires in September. Both sides say they support reauthorization. No official negotiations have been scheduled to work out a compromise. President Obama has threatened to veto the House version.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses soundbite(s)

LEAD: The Violence Against Women Act has been renewed twice with bipartisan support since it was originally passed in 1994, but this year's reauthorization has become the object of an election year political battle. Mary Anne Meyers reports.

Report: More in MI Raising Kids "Family Style"

Lansing, MI - The number of children in Michigan and around the nation living with grandparents or other relatives continues to rise. A new report by the Annie E. Casey foundation says the nearly three-million children in kinship care represent an 18 percent increase nationwide over the last decade. Jane Zehnder Merrell, project director for Kids Count Michigan, says many of those relatives are struggling with very little support.

Intro: Nearly 60-thousand Michigan children have something in common with the President of the United States – they're being raised by their grandparents or other relatives. According to a new report by the Annie E Casey Foundation, nearly three-million American children are being raised by relatives or close friends. That's an 18 percent increase in the last ten years. Jane Zehnder Merrell, with Kids Count Michigan, explains why.

Cut 11178 :11 "Military deployment has been a big issue, and deportation – all of the stresses in modern society, particularly during this prolonged recession, have had an impact."

Tag: Merrell says more than half the Michigan kids in kinship care are being raised by grandparents, who struggle to make ends meet. Most are single and poor, and many don't realize that the children qualify for financial support. She says many state programs for these families have been cut from the budget and even though Michigan's economy is improving, lawmakers aren't moving to restore them.

Second Cut: Merrell says everyone agrees that staying with relatives is the best option for the children.

Cut 12178 :14 "That maintains the bond within the extended family, it represents less disruption for the child. The bad news is that we don't do much as communities and in state policy to support these families."

Third Cut: Merrell says Michigan grandparents often face legal issues around enrolling children in school or getting them health care. Many of the support groups that used to help have had to close their doors – and she says Michigan policymakers don't seem to be paying attention.

Cut 13178 :16 "These huge cutbacks we've seen over several years of budget deficits that now, with revenues picking up, instead of talking about reinstating some of these vital programs, we're actually talking of making more tax cuts."

Tag 2: Merrell says some who are raising grandchildren are finding support through the University of Michigan's kinship care program, although that program is operating on a very limited budget.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses first soundbite(s)

LEAD: An increasing number of Michigan children have something in common with the President of the United States – they're being raised by their grandparents or other relatives. Mary Anne Meyers reports.

The group's proposal would ultimately be tougher than the statewide ban, set to take effect in July.

Abortion Battle Heats up in Michigan

Lansing, MI – The Michigan chapter of the National Organization for Women, and other women's groups, head to Lansing tomorrow to protest legislation coming up on the floor of the House that imposes new restrictions on abortion. Comments from Mary Pollack (PAHL-ick) Legislative vice president, NOW's Michigan chapter; and Pam Sherstad (SURE-staad), communications director with Right to Life of Michigan.

Intro: When legislation that imposes strict new rules on abortions in Michigan comes up on the floor of the House this week, several groups that support women's reproductive rights plan to be there protesting. Mary Pollack, with the Michigan chapter of the National Organization for Women says that's because they weren't allowed to testify during a hearing on the bills that passed late last week in committee.

Cut 31178 :07 "A hearing was held for 90 minutes. Planned Parenthood, Michigan Now, A-C-L-U were not allowed to speak."

Tag: The proposed legislation would ban abortion after 20 weeks, except in some cases when the woman's life is at risk. It would make it a crime to coerce a woman into having an abortion, and require more regulations and insurance for clinics and doctors who provide abortions. Opponents call the legislation an attack on women's reproductive health. Supporters say it protects lives.

Second Cut: Some doctors oppose new regulations on abortion clinics saying they will limit access to legal abortions. But Pam Sherstad with Right to Life of Michigan disagrees.

Cut 32178 :07 "Abortion clinics should be licensed and inspected as the outpatient surgical facilities that they are."

Tag 1: Under current Michigan law, clinics that provide abortions for more than half their patients are already regulated as outpatient surgical facilities. The proposed legislation would require clinics to be regulated as such if they provide 6 or more abortions per month.

Third Cut: Pollack sees this legislation as an effort to saddle clinics and doctors with excessive regulation.

Cut 33178 :12 "It combines a lot of different clinic harassment and doctor harassment provisions into one bill and essentially would close down most abortion clinics in this state."

Tag: The proposed legislation, introduced by Republican Representative Deb Shaughnessy, that bans abortion after 20 weeks, would make no exception in the case of rape, incest or fetal abnormality. The Guttmacher Institute reports that Republican dominated state legislatures passed 92 abortion restrictions last year alone, compared to the previous record of 34.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses first soundbite(s)

LEAD: New laws that restrict abortions in Michigan are coming up for debate in the state House of Representatives this week. Mary Anne Meyers reports that the battle lines are drawn.

Doors Open for Young Michigan Immigrants- But Will They Stay Open?

Detroit, MI - President Obama's decision on Friday to stop deporting young undocumented immigrants opens doors for thousands of young people in Michigan and around the nation. 18-year-old Juan Sancen, whose parents brought him from Mexico when he was 12, now says this may be his ticket to MIT. The United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) is expected this week to outline how young people will be able to qualify for their new immigration status. Comments from Sancen (Sahn-SEN) and Susan Reed, supervising attorney with the Michigan Immigration Rights Center.

Intro: Juan Sancen is an undocumented immigrant from Mexico, whose parents brought him here when he was 12. He just graduated second highest in his class from Chavez High School in Detroit, but had been afraid being undocumented would prevent him from getting into college. He says when he heard the news about the end to deportations for students like him, he felt relieved.

Cut 35178 :07 "I was really surprised and happy. I want to pursue my education in this country. I just got an email from an MIT admissions officer."

Tag: He says if he gets into the Massachusetts Institute of Technology he'll be closer to realizing his dream of becoming a physicist.

Second Cut: Susan Reed, an attorney with the Michigan Immigration Rights Center says that the Obama administration will be placing young immigrants like Juan on what they call "deferred action status." Which means they'll be made the lowest priority for deportation.

Cut 36178 :07 "People who have deferred action are also eligible for work authorization and then they'll get an employment authorization document."

Tag 1: Reed says the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) will be releasing details on how to get the deferment this week. The policy change will affect 800 thousand immigrants in Michigan and around the nation who were brought to the US before they turned 16, who are younger than 30 years old and have no criminal record.

Third Cut: Reed says while this is clearly a step forward for immigrants, she is cautiously optimistic.

Cut 37178 :12 "I am, because if the president were to change his mind or a new president were to come into office, this program could be terminated instantly."

Tag 2: This new policy does not guarantee a path to citizenship like the "Dream Act," which Congress has not been able to pass. Reed says she'd like the next steps to be passing the "Dream Act" and comprehensive immigration reform. Republican leaders say they won't reform immigration law until border security is tightened up.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses first soundbite(s)

LEAD: The US Citizenship and Immigration Services Department this week will release the details of President Obama's decision to stop deporting young undocumented immigrants. Meantime Mary Anne Meyers reports on what it means to one man in Michigan.

Cell Phone Safety Review – Concerns Grow about Wireless Radiation

Lansing, MI– The Federal Communication Commission has agreed to conduct its first review of cell phone safety standards in 15 years. Comments from Camilla Rees (REECE), founder and director, ElectromagneticHealth.org and Devra Davis, Ph.D., the founder and director of the Environmental Health Trust.

Intro: There is growing concern about how the rapid growth of wireless technology like cell phones and smart meters will impact the health of Michiganders and others around the nation. Camilla Rees with the group “Electromagnetic-Health-dot-ORG” says more and more communities around the nation have issued moratoriums on smart meters.

Cut 39178 :11 "One of the core issues that people have with smart meters is that they emit microwave radiation and they're spreading this radiation all throughout people's homes and neighborhoods - and many people are getting sick."

Tag: Utility companies use smart meters to relay data about power use at homes and businesses, and the industry says they are safe. Rees says in addition to health issues there are also cost, privacy and security concerns about the meters.

Second Cut: Radiation is also an issue with mobile phones, and last week the FCC proposed the first review of cell-phone safety guidelines since 1996. Doctor Devra Davis with Environmental Health Trust says the FCC needs to expand the scope of its proposed review.

Cut 40178 :12 "It's good news that the FCC is looking at the standards, but they need to expand their probe to ask about effects from cell phones that have nothing to do with heat — and may have damaging effects on our brains and bodies for years to come."

Third Cut: The whole issue of Electromagnetic Health was the focus of a resolution passed last week by the U.S. Health Freedom Congress in Chicago. Dr. Davis says the action supports consumers' right to know about the potential risks from wireless products.

Cut 41178 :12 "That we do not have enough information to assume that these devices are safe, and that we have a right to know what science tells us now, and we need to be monitoring and studying things rather than experimenting on people."

Tag: Advocates for Electromagnetic Safety say Congress needs to actively oversee the proposed FCC review process.

OPTIONAL REPORTER WRAP: uses first soundbite(s)

LEAD: The Federal Communication Commission has agreed to conduct its first review of cell phone safety standards in 15 years. Meantime, Mary Anne Meyers reports that there is growing concern about how other wireless technology like smart meters could impact the health of Michiganders.
